QUESTIONS PRESENTED

Section 440(d) of the AntiTerrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 ("AEDPA") removed the ability of long-time lawful permanent residents to seek a waiver of deportation under Title 8 of the United States Code, § 1182(c). In INS v. St. Cyr, 533 U.S. 289 (2001), the Court held that aliens convicted prior to the enactment of § 440(d) remained eligible for a discretionary waiver of deportation provided they were eligible for such relief at the time of their plea, under the law then in effect. The questions presented are:

1. Whether aliens who were convicted by jury trial prior to the enactment of the AEDPA, for pre-enactment offenses, remain eligible for a discretionary waiver of deportation per the Court's holding in St. Cyr.

2. If not, whether equal protection is violated where the restriction applies to deportable, but not excludable aliens.

The case also raises the following antecedent question:

3. Whether deportation proceedings commence, for purposes of determining the retroactive nature of § 440(d)'s temporal reach, upon service of the Order to Show Cause on the alien, or upon filing with the Immigration Court, for which the courts of appeals are in conflict.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Petitioner, Hugo Armendariz-Montoya, respectfully petitions for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in this case.

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the court of appeals (App., infra, 1a-14a) is reported at 291 F.3d 1116. The opinion of the district court (App., infra, 44a-45a) which incorporated, in part, the order granting petitioner habeas relief, is unreported. The recommendation of the magistrate judge (App. infra, 15a-43a) is unreported. The decisions of the immigration judge (App., infra, 48a), and Board of Immigration Appeals (App., infra, 46a-47a) are unreported.

JURISDICTION

STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

Reprinted in an appendix to this petition (App. 50a-53a) are pertinent provisions of Section 1182(c) of Title 8, United States Code, as in effect before April 24, 1996; Section 1182(c) of Title 8, as amended effective April 24, 1996; Sections 1229b(a), and 1252(g) of Title 8, as in effect beginning April 1, 1997; Section 440 of the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996, Pub. L. No. 104-132, 110 Stat. 1268, 1276 (enacted Apr. 24, 1996) ("AEDPA"); and Section 309(c) of the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996, Pub. L. No. 104-208, Div. C, 110 Stat. 3009-597, 3009-625 (enacted Sept. 30, 1996) ("IIRIRA").

STATEMENT

A. Statutory Background

This case presents important, recurring questions concerning the application of a new statute governing the deportation of legal permanent residents for criminal convictions that pre-dated its enactment. Prior to 1996, legal permanent residents who accrued at seven years residence in the United States and committed a deportable act, were statutorily eligible to apply for a waiver of deportation, provided that they were not convicted of an "aggravated felony" offense and did not serve at least five years imprisonment, regardless of whether the conviction was obtained by plea or jury trial. In 1996, Congress added a new restriction on the statutory eligibility to apply for a waiver by barring relief for all aliens convicted of controlled substance violations or "aggravated felony" offenses. Thus, lawful permanent residents who were once eligible for relief under the prior law were subjected to mandatory deportation under the new law.

Although Congress has broad, plenary constitutional powers over the regulation of aliens in the United States, including restrictions on the availability of relief from deportation for events which pre-date the change in law, Congress must express such an intention in an unambiguous manner. If Congress fails to clearly manifest its intention, the new restrictions cannot apply retroactively to impose new disabilities or legal consequences to past considerations as a result of the law's change. A new restriction which further upsets past conduct, settled expectations, reasonable reliance, and fair notice is impermissibly retroactive. Decisions or considerations based upon a particular state of law or then-existing information are impermissibly frustrated when a new legal consequence is attached at a time after the decision-making process has been completed.

B. Proceedings Below

1. Petitioner, Hugo Armendariz-Montoya, is a thirty-three year old citizen of Mexico who first "entered the United States without inspection when he was three years old." App. 2a. Mr. Armendariz became a lawful permanent resident on May 23, 1978, at the age of eight. Mr. Armendariz "has resided in the United States since his entry," for more than thirty years. App. 2a. All of Mr. Armendariz's family – including his U.S. citizen mother, lawful permanent resident father, U.S. citizen child, and three U.S. citizen siblings – reside in the United States.

2. On September 15, 1995, Mr. Armendariz was convicted of the offense of Unlawful Possession of Cocaine for Sale; Mr. Armendariz was "sentenced to five years, eight months imprisonment." App. 2a. While incarcerated, Mr. Armendariz successfully completed several rehabilitation programs and was released early from criminal custody in September, 1999. On September 22, 1995, the U.S. Immigration & Naturalization Service ("INS") lodged a detainer against Mr. Armendariz.

3. On April 5, 1996 the INS issued an Order to Show Cause ("OSC") in deportation[1] proceedings, alleging his deportability for having been convicted of a qualifying aggravated felony or controlled substance violation. See 8 U.S.C. §§ 1251(a)(2)(A)(iii), (B)(i) (1994). App. 3a. On April 22, 1996, the INS served the OSC upon Mr. Armendariz, explaining the nature of deportation proceedings, his rights and obligations, legal authority for the proceeding, his right to counsel, the factual allegations, grounds of deportability, and the consequences of his failure to appear at his deportation proceeding. App. at 3a.

[1] An immigration proceeding instituted after April 1, 1997 is classified as "removal" and has varying procedures, rights, requirements, judicial review rules, and relief. See 8 U.S.C. § 1229a (Supp. IV 1998).

4. Both at the time Mr. Armendariz was convicted, and when he was served with the OSC, he was eligible for a § 212(c) waiver. The INS filed the OSC with the Immigration Court eight months later, on December 19, 1996. App. 3a. In the interim period, on April 24, 1996, Section 440(d) of the AEDPA was enacted, negating § 212(c) relief for aliens deportable for having committed a qualifying offense. During the course of his deportation proceeding, Mr. Armendariz sought relief pursuant to § 212(c) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(c) (1994). His requests were denied. App. 3a-4a.

5. In April 1997, an immigration judge ("IJ") determined a § 212(c) waiver was statutorily unavailable due to the then-recent amendments of Section 440(d) of the AEDPA, and issued an order of deportation. The Board of Immigration Appeals ("BIA") affirmed the IJ's decision, citing AEDPA Section 440(d)'s retroactive effect. App. 4a. Mr. Armendariz timely "filed a petition for review with [the court of appeals]." App. 4a. In February 2000, the court of appeals dismissed the petition for lack of jurisdiction, citing Magana-Pizano v. INS, 200 F.3d 603, 609 (9th Cir. 1999); see also IIRIRA § 309(c)(4)(G), 110 Stat. 3009-626 to 627 (stripping jurisdiction over claims on direct review for aliens deportable for certain grounds). App. 4a.

6. In March 2000, Mr. Armendariz sought habeas corpus relief in the district court, challenging the BIA's legal ruling that he was statutorily ineligible to apply for Section 212(c). The magistrate judge recommended the district court grant the petition based upon a finding that the service of the OSC in conjunction with lodging of the detainer, was sufficient to render the proceedings "pending" (or "commenced") for "retroactivity" purposes of determining whether the AEDPA's and IIRIRA's substantive changes to the law of discretionary waivers under § 212(c) apply, and per the court of appeals' prior holding in Magana-Pizano, infra, that § 212(c) remained available to those whose proceedings commenced prior to the AEDPA. App. 15a-43a

7. The magistrate judge noted that it "need not decide whether service of the OSC alone was sufficient to commence deportation proceedings" because a detainer was lodged in conjunction with the service of the OSC. App. 24a-28a. Also, the magistrate judge found the reasoning offered by the various courts of appeal to be persuasive. App. 26a-28a. See Wallace v. Reno, 194 F.3d 279 (1st Cir. 1999); Alanis-Bustamante v. Reno, 201 F.3d 1301 (11th Cir. 2000). The magistrate judge further noted that every other district court to consider the precise issue had ruled in favor of Mr. Armendariz's claim. App 27a. The magistrate judge declined to reach Mr. Armendariz's assertion that § 440(d) violated equal protection. App. 28a-29a. The district court adopted – in part – the magistrate's recommendations. App. 44a-45a. The district court ordered the remand and reopening of Mr. Armendariz's case for consideration of a § 212(c) hearing. Ibid. The INS perfected a timely appeal to the court of appeals. App. at 34.

8. The court of appeals reversed. App. at 4a-14a. First, the court concluded that the proceeding "commenced" upon the filing of the OSC – not only for purposes of the proceeding itself – but also for retroactivity purposes under § 440(d) and the continuing availability of § 212(c) relief, rather than upon service of the same. The court held, "[b]ecause the INS did not file the OSC until December 1996, his proceedings were not pending at the time of AEDPA's enactment." App. 9a. Secondly, in the panel's view, aliens convicted by jury trial rather than by plea were ineligible to seek § 212(c) relief because "application of § 440(d) does not result in any retroactive effect" insofar as, "aliens who elected a jury trial cannot plausibly claim that they would have acted any differently [if they] had known about § 440(d)." App. 9a-10a (citing LaGuerre v.

Reno, 164 F.3d 1035 (7th Cir. 1998) (holding that habeas corpus review did not survive § 440(d)).

(i) In holding that proceedings "commenced" with the OSC's filing, the court "relied upon INS regulations to this effect" and purportedly based its decision upon Circuit precedent. Cortez-Felipe v. INS, 245 F.3d 1054 (9th Cir. 2001); App. 5a. In rejecting Mr. Armendariz's assertions that Cortez was distinguishable on the facts and law, the court stated "Cortez does not allow it, and states in sweeping terms that deportation proceedings commence with the filing of the OSC." App. 7a. While the court acknowledged the "material identical circumstances" present in the First Circuit's case, and the distinctions drawn by the First Circuit in both Wallace v. Reno, supra at 281, and Costa v. INS, 233 F.3d 31 (1st Cir. 2000), between the "commencement" of proceedings and "commencement" for retroactivity purposes, the court "decline[d] to follow it" insofar as it found it "unpersuasive." App. 6a-8a. The panel found that the issue was constrained by the court's earlier decision, in that "Cortez accorded great weight to the relevant INS regulations, which do not allow for a different outcome depending upon whether a particular section of AEDPA or IIRIRA is involved." App. 7a. The court did not address Armendariz's contentions that this Court's holding in Reno v. American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Comm., 525 U.S. 471 (1999), governed the First Circuit's decision in Costa, and the court's prior decision in Cortez, regarding 8 U.S.C. § 1252(g)'s limitation that no court shall have jurisdiction to hear any cause or claim by an alien, "from the decision or action by the Attorney General to commence proceedings, adjudicate cases, or execute removal orders." See e.g., 8 U.S.C. § 1252(g) (Supp. IV 1998). The court also rejected Armendariz's claim that the lodging of the warrant of detainer in conjunction with the service of the OSC, rendered proceedings "pending" (or "commenced") for retroactivity purposes in determining AEDPA § 440(d)'s temporal reach. In declining to follow the Eleventh Circuit's decision in Alains-Bustamante v. Reno, supra, on materially similar facts, the court noted, "Cortez does not allow for such a rule." App. 8a-9a. The relevant INS regulations make the filing of the OSC, not the lodging of a detainer, the critical event." Ibid.

(ii) While observing that Congress did not prescribe AEDPA's temporal reach, the court found that § 440(d) applies to Armendariz because it did not have a retroactive effect. In the panel's view, "aliens who elected a jury trial cannot plausibly claim that they would have acted any differently if they had known about § 440(d)." App. 10a. In reaching that conclusion, the court purported to apply (App. 13a) the two-step analysis set forth in Landgraf v. USI Film Products, 511 U.S. 244, 280 (1994), for determining whether a federal statute applies to pre-enactment conduct. App. 9a. The court stated, "[i]t would border on the absurd to argue that these aliens might have decided not to commit drug crimes, or might have resisted conviction more vigorously, had they known that if they were not only imprisoned but also, when their prison term ended, ordered deported, they [faced mandatory deportation]." App. 10a (quoting LaGuerre v. Reno, 164 F.3d at 1041 (7th Cir. 1998).

(iii) Finally, the court, in rejecting Armendariz's claims that equal protection is violated by providing a waiver to excludable, rather than deportable aliens, noted that "[we] rejected an identical challenge in United States v. Estrada-Torres, 179 F.3d 776 (9th Cir. 1999), overruled on other grounds, United States v. Rivera-Sanchez, 247 F.3d 905, 909 (9th Cir. 2001) (en banc)." App. 12a. In Estrada-Torres, the court found that "despite § 440(d)'s plain language, it applies equally to exclusion and deportation proceedings." Ibid. Here, the court also noted the inter-circuit tension in that, "[w]hile our sister circuits have uniformly rejected an identical challenge, they have employed different reasoning . . . [they] have adopted the BIA's interpretation that § 440(d) only applies to deportation, and not to exclusion proceedings." App. 13a.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

I. The Circuits Are Divided As To When Proceedings "Commence" For Purposes Of Retroactivity Under AEDPA § 440(d)

A. The Case Squarely Presents The Conflict

Insofar as the court of appeals' decision, on important issues such as the administration of the immigration laws and the retroactive impact of new legislation, is in conflict with the decisions at least two sister courts of appeal involving materially similar circumstances, this Court's supervisory role ought be invoked. Compare Armendariz-Montoya v. Sonchik, supra, and Asad v. Reno, 242 F.3d 702 (6th Cir. 2001) with Wallace v. Reno, supra, and Alainis-Bustamante v. Reno, supra. This genuine, legal conflict exists despite materially similar circumstances, which has been expressly acknowledged by the court ("We decline to follow the First Circuit's distinction between AEDPA and IIRIRA in determining when deportation proceedings commence.") App. 7a; ("[w]e are also unpersuaded by Costa that the time deportation proceedings commence should turn on whether a particular section of AEDPA or IIRIRA is involved.") App. 8a.; ("Armendariz urges us to adopt the logic of the Eleventh Circuit, and hold that deportation proceedings commence with the service of the OSC if a detainer is contemporaneously lodged. Cortez does not allow for such a rule.") App. 8a. The need, therefore, to bring uniformity of the decisions among the federal courts of appeals which have addressed the issue of "pending" (or "commenced") proceedings regarding the retroactive effect of AEDPA's § 440(d), is paramount. Because the underlying questions and proper administration of the immigration laws are issues of practical significance affecting thousands of individuals, the direct conflict which now exists among the First, Sixth, Ninth, and Eleventh Circuits offers a further compelling reason of national importance requiring this Court's supervisory jurisdiction to be invoked.

First, the court of appeals misconstrued the holding and reasoning of the Circuit's decision in Cortez-Felipe. The court held that "[Cortez] tells us that deportation proceedings commence with the filing of the OSC with the Immigration Court." Cortez, in fact, does not stand for such a broad-sweeping, generalized proposition. Instead, Cortez concerns the ability of an alien to "commence" proceedings on his own accord or through judicial action. At issue in Cortez was the prohibition of a court's ability to review the discretionary decision of the Attorney General with respect to three concrete actions "to commence proceedings, adjudicate cases, or execute removal orders" which was first visited by this Court. See Reno v. American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Comm., supra at 481-82; see also 8 U.S.C. § 1252(g). Cortez did not analyze when proceedings are "pending" for retroactivity purposes, but rather a court's ability to interfere with the prosecutorial decisions of the Attorney General to affirmatively "commence" proceedings. Id. at 945. This Court specifically stressed the limited scope of Section 1252(g), and its aim to protect premature review of "discretionary determinations." Id. at 943-944 (holding that the "zipper" clause does not cover the entire universe of deportation claims.) In this light, Cortez concerned principles of "equitable estoppel" and the ability of a court to "order" the Attorney General to "commence" a particular type of proceeding. Cortez, 245 F.3d at 1057 ("Petitioner urges us to exercise our equitable powers . . . we have not authority to grant the requested relief.") Because the court of appeals misconstrued this Court's precedent in its understanding of the correct application of Section 1252(g) as well as the reasoning of Cortez, it incorrectly decided when proceedings are "pending" for purposes of retroactivity in direct conflict with the First and Eleventh Circuits. Cortez, 245 F.3d at 1057 ("[t]he Attorney General has discretion regarding when and whether to initiate deportation proceedings."); Accord Reno v. AADC, supra, at 481-83. The panel misconstrued this Court's precedent regarding Section 1252(g).

In contrast, the First Circuit clearly identified, recognized, and distinguished the subtle difference between these apparently similar issues in Costa v. INS, 233 F.3d 36. The court of appeals' decision failed to properly distinguish the reasoning in Cortez which was forged from the First Circuit's earlier decision in Costa. Cortez, 245 F.3d at 1056-57. In turn, the court failed to recognize the First Circuit's reasoning in Costa was guided by this Court's own decision in AADC, and § 1252(g). Costa, 233 F.3d at 36-37. Cortez is distinguishable both on the facts and the law. The panel's decision on this issue is in irreconcilable conflict with the First and Eleventh Circuits.

B. The Issue Presented By The Conflict Is Recurring And Of Great Practical Importance Regarding The Immigration Laws

The amount of litigation which has spawned as a result of the enactment of AEDPA § 440(d) is a recurring problem affecting the national judiciary. Nearly seven years after the passage of the AEDPA, countless legal challenges, writs of habeas corpus, and petitions for review and certiorari have been filed. Because the immigration laws affect foreign and national policies and are continually called upon for review, there exists a recurring problem which has continuing future consequences. Evidence of this effect is told by the history of litigation formed in the wake of Section 440(d), itself. See INS v. St. Cyr, 533 U.S. 289, 290 (2001) (Court recognizing "[t]he importance of [the] questions warranted our grant of certiorari.") Although Section 440(d) has since been abolished, its effects continue to linger. Moreover, the general principles giving rise to litigation in the first instance are not likely to change, as Congress has plenary power over immigration matters. INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 941-942 (1983) (Congress must choose "a constitutionally permissible means of implementing" that power). Hence, so long as Congress fails to clearly state the parameters in exercising this right, this Court's supervision is required. Given the current political environment and the real possibility of Congressional action affecting a change in future immigration law, the potential for additional controversy and confusion is manifest. A review of the recent history of protracted litigation, lends support that only the prompt action of this Court can resolve the questions presented. See Brooks v. Ashcroft, 283 F.3d 1268, 1275 n.7 ("We would like to comment on the plethora of cases that have inundated our Circuit and our sister Circuits regarding this issue, and the ease in which this burdensome and protracted litigation could have been avoided with a simple declaration by Congress regarding the retroactivity of legislation when it is passed. A one line sentence could have avoided many of these problems, and would certainly have spared the resources of the federal court system.") (emphasis added). Unless this Court takes immediate action, the current trend of litigation is likely to continue, burdening this judiciary's limited resources.

Moreover, the importance of the issues is underscored as illustrated by their frequent recurrence in the district courts. The issue has arisen repeatedly and is the subject of pervasive confusion among the lower courts. As the magistrate judge noted, every other district court to consider the precise issue has ruled in favor of Mr. Armendariz's claim. App. at 92 (citing Attwood v. Reno, 111 F.Supp.2d 57 (D. Mass. 2000) (holding that petitioner's deportation proceedings commenced on April 18, 1996 when the INS issued the OSC even though it was not served until June 6, 1996) affirmed on other grounds Attwood v. Ashcroft, 260 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2001); Sciglitano

v. Holmes, 2000 WL 675696 (E.D.Pa. 2000) (holding that the service of the OSC commenced deportation proceedings); Mercado-Amador v. Reno, 47 F. Supp. 2d 1219, 1224 (D.Or. 1999) (holding that proceedings commenced upon OSC's issuance); Canela v. United States Dept. of Justice, 64 F. Supp. 2d 456, 458 (E.D.Pa. 1999) (same); Dunbar v. INS, 64 F. Supp. 2d 47, 52 (D. Conn. 1999) (same); Bury v. Reno, 101 F. Supp. 2d 296 (E.D.Pa 2000) (same); Pena-Rosario v. Reno, 83 F. Supp. 2d 349 (E.D.N.Y. 2000) (same). Of the four Circuit courts of appeals which have addressed the "commencement" issue, the Sixth and Ninth are divided with the First and Eleventh. Hence, this Court's supervisory role is further required.

II. The Decision Below Reflects The Widespread Confusion And Uncertainty As To This Court's Retroactivity Analysis Under Langraf And Other Precedents, Which This Court Alone Can Dispel

Importantly, this Court ought to grant certiorari because the court of appeals has decided a pure question of federal law that has not been, but should be, settled by this Court. That is, whether this Court's retroactivity analysis and holding in St. Cyr should be logically extended to aliens who were convicted by jury trial rather than by plea. Moreover, the decision below has been decided in a way that conflicts with the relevant decisions of this Court regarding the Landgraf principles of retroactivity. INS v. St. Cyr, supra; Reno v. AADC, supra. The court of appeals has misconstrued and misapplied this Court's applicable retroactivity precedents by limiting, and requiring, a degree of fostered reliance. Armendariz-Montoya v. Sonchik, supra, at 1121 (". . . aliens who elected a jury trial cannot plausibly claim that they would have acted any differently.") As the court of appeals' decision is an incorrect application of this Court's precedential decisions and is in tension with the same, certiorari ought to be granted.

Here, the court of appeals incorrectly concluded that § 440(d) of the AEDPA did not have a genuine, impermissible retroactive effect if an alien was convicted by "jury trial," rather than by plea. The court of appeals' purported retroactivity analysis failed to recognize that aliens – when facing a criminal proceeding – make strategic choices and decisions whether to risk going to trial or to accept a plea agreement based upon the direct impact those decisions will have upon their immigration status. The court of appeals ignored the fact that aliens often base decisions, concerning the preservation of their immigration status, upon the information which is then-available. Because the court of appeals' reasoning was unwarrantedly narrow, it misses the fact that if aliens had been aware that § 440(d) was forthcoming and of its potential impact upon their immigration statuses, at the time of their decision-making process, they would have elected to accept a plea agreement or other alternative disposition which preserved their immigration statuses, rather than risk going to trial mistakenly relying on the availability of § 212(c) in the event they had lost at trial. See e.g., INS v. St. Cyr, 533 U.S. at 322-24 (2001).

The court's flawed retroactivity analysis, moreover, failed to recognize this Court's reasoning that § 440(d) impaired a party's rights when he acted (i.e., by making a strategic decision based upon information known to him in deciding whether to go to trial or accept a plea), increased a party's liability for past conduct (i.e., by removing the availability of § 212(c) relief based upon a past criminal conviction), and imposed new duties with respect to transactions already completed (i.e., removing the availability of § 212(c) relief based upon the strategic decision-making process during his criminal proceeding). Clearly, as this Court has noted in St.Cyr, Section 440(d) increased the liability of Mr. Armendariz's criminal conduct and decision-making processes, and impaired his rights to seek a § 212(c) waiver based upon his decision to go to trial. Id.

at 323-35. The court's retroactivity analysis falls short of traditionally accepted jurisprudence, and ignores the reasoning and guidance of this Court's decisions in both Landgraf and St. Cyr. Finally, the decision failed to properly identify Section 440(d)'s retroactive effect and failed to adhere to the framework and approach developed by the circuit's prior precedential decisions. Magana-Pizano v. INS, at 613 (noting that "AEDPA § 440(d)'s bar of discretionary relief . . . should not apply to aliens whose deportation proceedings were pending when AEDPA became law").

This case presents an important and recurring statutory and constitutional problem which this Court must address. Moreover, because the court's decision is an erroneous interpretation of this Court's retroactivity principles, it is likely to have serious judicial consequences in the long run. The erosion and misinterpretation of this Court's Landgraf analysis, by the various courts of appeal, regarding when a statute functions impermissibly retroactive is of utmost importance in all areas of the law. The various courts of appeal which have spoken on the issue have misinterpreted this Court's Landgraf reasoning to hold that "reliance" is a strict requirement. See Dias v. INS, 311 F.3d 456, 458 (1st Cir. 2002) ("we [have] held the retroactivity analysis must include an examination of reliance in a guilty plea situation."); See Brooks v. Ashcroft, 283 F.3d at 1274 ("[b]ecause [petitioner] did not so choose to rely upon the agreed upon terms of a plea, he is not similarly situated to individuals who plead guilty. There are not the same concerns of quid pro quo benefit for an exchange"); Asad v. Reno, 242 F.3d at 705 ("Asad did not legitimately rely on the possibility that section 212(c) relief would be afforded him"); Chambers v. Reno, 307 F.3d 384 (4th Cir. 2002) ("[petitioner] does not have a reliance interest comparable to that which was at the heart of St. Cyr . . . [who] made his decisions in the context of a quid pro quo relationship"); Rankine v. Reno, 2003 WL 179792,

*5 (2nd Cir. (N.Y.)) ("none of these petitioners detrimentally changed his position in reliance on continued eligibility for § 212(c) relief."). Thus, because the lower courts of appeal have ignored the broad range of factors used in determining retroactivity, they have impermissibly construed and eroded this Court's Landgraf principles, for which this Court must provide clarification. Because the doctrine of judicial restraint mandates that patience, in the judicial resolution of conflicts, often yields the most desirous results, the issues before this Court are ripe for certiorari review insofar as the various courts of appeal which have had occasion to review it have already spoken.

Finally, because this Court addressed only the narrow question presented in St. Cyr regarding convictions by plea, rather than by jury, the development of the law in this area also mandates review. This case is yet another piece of the mosaic in that it is the companion to St. Cyr.

III. The Decision Below is Incorrect

A. The Circuit Courts Have Disagreed As To When Proceedings "Commence" For Purposes Of Retroactivity.

Cortez-Felipe v. INS, 245 F.3d at 1055, upon which the court relied, is distinguishable on its facts and the law. In Cortez, an alien anticipating IIRIRA's April 1, 1997 amendments, which included more stringent provisions for discretionary relief, set up an appointment with her attorney for the issuance of an OSC by the INS. In March, 1997, an OSC was issued, but never filed. Instead, the INS issued a "Notice to Appear" to initiate "removal" proceedings; which was filed in April, 1997. Hence, that case involved the propriety of two different regimes – "removal" or "deportation" – rather than "retroactivity" concerns for a single proceeding. See Cortez, 245 F.3d at 1055 ("Petitioner presents 'an abstract legal question concerning the effect, if any, of a served but unfiled OSC'. . . .") (quoting Costa, supra, at 34).

Cortez argued "equitable estoppel" against the INS and that deportation proceedings had commenced, first. The court of appeals dismissed Cortez's case holding that it was without power or authority to review the prosecutorial functions of the Attorney General to initiate proceedings. See Cortez-Felipe v. INS, 245 F.3d at 1056-57 (citing Yao v. INS, 2 F.3d 317, 319 (9th Cir. 1993) ("As a matter of statutory authority and administrative discretion, the INS is free to decide not to commence deportation proceedings. . . . "); Cabasug v. INS, 847 F.2d 1321, 1324 (9th Cir. 1988) ("The Attorney General retains discretion at the stage of deciding to initiate a deportation proceeding.") The Circuit had previously recognized that Cortez's request was essentially an attempt to "order" the INS to initiate proceedings so that he could take advantage of pre-IIRIRA rules. As the Circuit noted, it was without lawful authority or power to review the discretionary decision of the Attorney General to initiate proceedings. Cortez, 245 F.3d at 1057. In this vein, this Court has held that no court shall have jurisdiction to hear any cause or claim by an alien, "from the decision or action by the Attorney General to commence proceedings, adjudicate cases, or execute removal orders." See Reno v. American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee, supra, at 483 (holding that the "zipper clause" contained in 8 U.S.C. § 1252(g) does not cover the entire universe of deportation claims); United States v. Camacho-Bordes, 94 F.3d 1168, 1174 (8th Cir. 1996); see also 8 U.S.C. § 1252(g) (Supp. IV 1998). Hence, the reasoning behind the decision in Cortez is based upon this Court's interpretation of § 1252(g) to preclude judicial review of the Attorney General's decision to "commence" proceedings. See e.g., AADC, 525 U.S. at 483-84. The court's decision incorrectly conflated the two issues of "commencement" and "pending" for retroactivity purposes.

The First Circuit, however, properly identified and recognized the precise distinction between the issue presented in Cortez-Felipe, and the issue presented here. The facts in Costa v. INS, 233 F.3d at 34, are similar, if not identical, to Cortez-Felipe. In that case, an alien, accompanied by his attorney, presented himself at a INS office for the issuance of an OSC. The OSC was never issued, and instead a Notice to Appear was served and filed. Costa v. INS, 233 F.3d at 32. Costa challenged his removal proceeding, citing Wallace v. Reno, supra, and arguing that he had been placed into deportation proceedings. The First Circuit stated, in pertinent part,

> The Wallace case did not primarily involve IIRIRA, but rather, a complementary set of changes of the immigration laws effected by the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (AEDPA). . . . Faced with a close question as to whether the enlarged ban on waivers could constitutionally be applied to a person who, prior to AEDPA's effective date, had pled guilty to a felony which at the time of the plea did not render the perpetrator ineligible for suspension of deportation, we concluded that Congress did not intend the ban on discretionary waivers to operate in so draconian a fashion. Wallace, 194 F.3d at 286-87. In that context, we rejected the INS's contention that 8 C.F.R. § 3.14(a) controlled and held that, for purposes of his habeas case, Wallace had been placed in deportation proceedings . . . when the INS served him with an OSC. . . . Wallace is inapposite here. There, we were concerned that once criminal proceedings against an alien had begun, the existing rules applicable to suspension of deportation likely would command his attention and foster reliance during his decisionmaking in connection with the pending criminal charges. Id. Given the likelihood that such rules might have played a significant role in the alien's strategic choices when defending > against the pre-AEDPA criminal charges (e.g., deciding whether to plead guilty or to stand trial), changing them after the game had started raised a special set of fairness concerns.

Costa v. INS, supra, at 34-35 (emphasis added).

The First Circuit went on to note that the facts presented in Costa, almost identical to those in Cortez-Felipe, mandated that the proceeding be considered as "commenced" upon the filing of an OSC. Id. The First Circuit recognized four important distinctions, present both in Costa and Cortez. The Circuit noted Costa dealt with: (1) pure-IIRIRA principles, rather than retroactivity considerations under AEDPA, (2) a non-criminal alien (e.g., Costa had no need to make strategic choices) rather than a criminal-alien making strategic choices when defending against pre-AEDPA criminal charges, (3) an alien who was already on notice of the impending shift from suspension of deportation to cancellation of removal and used that information in his decision-making process (i.e., Wallace had no notice of § 440(d)'s shift in law), and (4) a non-habeas, direct Petition for Review case in which the agency's time tables, starting points, and regulations were important regarding judicial review. The court failed to recognize these differences and improperly blurred the line between Section 1252(g)'s "prosecutorial discretion" considerations found in Cortez-Felipe, and when proceedings are "pending" for purposes of "retroactivity" under § 440(d). Cortez had notice of the law and tried to take advantage of it; Armendariz had neither opportunity at the time he decided to go to trial.

Similarly, in Morales-Ramirez v. Reno, 209 F.3d 977 (7th Cir. 2000), the Seventh Circuit recognized the distinction between Section 1252(g)'s bar of review and the "retroactivity" concerns of § 440(d). In that case, an alien who was determined to have attempted to smuggle contraband into the United States was initially issued a "Notice to Applicant for Admission Detained for Hearing" and referred for "exclusion" proceedings under former 8 U.S.C. § 1226 (1994). Thereafter, the INS failed to file the charging document with the Court and instead issued a "Notice to Appear" under newly enacted 8 U.S.C. § 1229b (Supp. IV 1998). In that case, the Seventh Circuit concluded that "Congress has explicitly restricted our ability to review the decision by the Attorney General's delegates to commence proceedings, see 8 U.S.C. § 1252(g), so our review is limited to whether this discretion to commence proceedings empowered the Attorney General to issue regulations on when proceedings must be adjudged to have commenced." See Morales-Ramirez v. Reno, 209 F.3d at 982 (emphasis added.) As the First Circuit's decision in Costa, the Seventh Circuit's decision was premised upon this Court's holding that jurisdiction was limited under § 1252(g), so as to not interfere with the Attorney General's decision to "commence" exclusion proceedings when removal proceedings had already been commenced. Here, there is no dispute whether "deportation" proceedings were commenced. Mr. Armendariz was not initially referred for "deportation" proceedings and then referred to "removal" proceedings. The issue, here, is one of "retroactivity." As in Cortez and Costa, this case does not involve a served but unfiled charging document. The Seventh Circuit explained that it declined to follow the First and Eleventh Circuits' holdings since those cases involved different facts, and because the Court had reached an opposite conclusion regarding the retroactivity of § 440(d) of the AEDPA. Morales-Ramirez, 209 F.3d at 983 ("[In Wallace and Alanis-Bustamante] the courts concluded that the relevant inquiry lay not in when proceedings actually commenced, but when the reliance interests of aliens should be considered for purposes of determining whether sec. 440(d) should be retroactively applied."). See also LaGuerre v. Reno, supra, at 1041. Nevertheless, the Seventh Circuit's reasoning is substantially in line with the First and Eleventh Circuits.

Although the panel's decision cited to various decisions for the proposition that a case commences with the filing of an OSC before an Immigration Judge, none of these decisions have reached that conclusion with any analysis. See Orantes v. Thornburg, 919 F.2d 549, 553 (9th Cir. 1990) (reciting former regulation without analysis); See, e.g., Howell v. INS, 72 F.3d 288, 290 (2d Cir. 1995) (reciting former regulation without analysis); Dokic v. INS, 899 F.2d 530, 531-32 (6th Cir. 1990) (same). Conversely, the First and Eleventh Circuits addressed this precise issue and concluded in favor of Mr. Armendariz's claim. In Wallace v. Reno, 194 F.3d at 286-287, the First Circuit concluded that the alien's perspective is the relevant one for determining when a proceeding "commences" for purposes of deciding which statutory rules apply. Like the Eleventh Circuit in Mayers v. United States Dept. of INS, 175 F.3d at 1289, 1301 (11th Cir. 1999), the First Circuit in Wallace refused to retroactively apply AEDPA § 440(d) to pending deportation proceedings. In doing so, the First Circuit reasoned that:

> In this case, we are not concerned with INS's [sic] internal time tables, starting points, due dates, and the like but with the judicial question of retroactivity. This question turns on considerations unrelated to the purpose of INS regulations – primarily . . . with the evil Congress sought to prevent and the realities of reasonable reliance or settled expectations on the part of litigants. From this standpoint, we think that when an Order to Show Cause is served on the alien, the deportation process has effectively begun and expectations properly form, even if there is no actual reliance.

Id. (emphasis added.).

More compelling is the Eleventh's Circuit's holding in Alanis-Bustamante v. Reno, 201 F.3d at 1309. There, Bustamante was served with an OSC and a Warrant of Detainer in June, 1995 during the pendency of his state incarceration. Id. The INS, however, did not file the OSC with the Immigration Court, at all. During the next two (2) years, Bustamante remained incarcerated serving his sentence. Meanwhile, Congress passed the AEDPA and the IIRIRA. In June, 1997, instead of filing the OSC, the INS administratively canceled the OSC and issued a "Notice to Appear" to begin removal proceedings. At his removal hearing, Bustamante requested a § 212(c) waiver under former "deportation" proceeding provisions.

The Eleventh Circuit found that the BIA erred in concluding Bustamante was ineligible for a § 212(c) waiver, finding that the combination of the service of the OSC and the lodging of the warrant of detainer was sufficient to "commence" proceedings for purposes of determining the applicable law pertaining to discretionary waivers under former § 212(c). The Court ruled that to "conclude otherwise not only risks undermining the reasonable expectations of an alien, it also ignores the INS' power over an alien once it issues an OSC." The Eleventh Circuit went on to note that "[c]onsiderations of fairness convince us that for purposes of deciding which law applies, the removal proceedings in this case should be viewed as commencing at least on that date, June 28, 1995, when the show cause order had been served and the warrant of detainer lodged." Id. (emphasis added.)

B. The Panel's Decision Erodes The Court's Landgraf Retroactivity Analysis By Requiring Reliance To Find A Retroactive Effect For Aliens Convicted By Jury Trial.

The panel's decision is in conflict with this Court's Landgraf analysis and the Circuit's retroactivity analysis regarding AEDPA § 440(d) for convictions prior to the statute's amendments. INS v. St. Cyr, supra; Magana-Pizano v. INS. This Court in St. Cyr, concluded that aliens in either "deportation" or "removal" proceedings remain eligible for a § 212(c) waiver, whose convictions were obtained through plea agreements, and who, notwithstanding those convictions, would have been eligible for § 212(c) relief under the law in effect at the time of their plea. St. Cyr, 533 U.S. at 326. Because this Court was not confronted with the "jury trial" issue, it had no reason to extend its holding beyond the facts as then-presented. Id. Nevertheless, this Court's holding naturally extends to aliens convicted by way of jury rather than by plea.

Here, the critical issue is whether an alien convicted by jury trial, relying upon pre-AEDPA law in the course of his strategic decision-making process, is prejudiced by § 440(d), such that it constitutes a "retroactive effect." In St. Cyr, the Court found that there was no express Congressional intent in the AEDPA nor IIRIRA to apply the changes in § 212(c) relief, retroactively. Id. In this regard, the Court concluded that the Landgraf presumption against applying new statutes retroactively applies to issues of eligibility for discretionary relief from deportation. St. Cyr, 533 U.S. at 323. The Court found that altering the form of relief available constituted a "new disability." St. Cyr, 533 U.S. at 321.

Importantly, the court embraced a broad statement of the factors relevant to determining what constitutes a "retroactive effect." Id. Quoting Landgraf, supra, at 268-269, the Court stated that a statute has a retroactive effect when it "takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing laws, or creates a new obligation, imposes a new duty, or attaches a new disability, in respect to transactions or considerations already past." St. Cyr, supra, at 321. Specifically, the Court noted the "quid pro quo" arrangement by plea which can be understood as contributing to the conclusion that retroactive elimination of § 212(c) relief in the plea context is an "obvious and severe retroactive effect." Id. at 322.

Here, the Panel incorrectly concluded that "aliens who elected a jury trial cannot plausibly claim that they would have acted any differently if they had known about § 440(d)." On the contrary, if aliens deciding to risk going to trial had been aware of § 440(d) at the time of their decision, they might have elected to accept a plea agreement in lieu of risking going to trial. If Mr. Armendariz had known that § 440(d) would result in his mandatory deportation should he lose at trial, he would have had a greater incentive towards accepting a plea agreement to avoid a negative impact upon his immigration status (e.g., by accepting a plea to solicitation to sell cocaine). See Coronado-Durazo v. INS, 123 F.3d 1322 (9th Cir. 1997) (holding that solicitation under Arizona law does not constitute a deportable offense); Accord Leyva-Licea v. INS, 187 F.3d 1147, 1150 (9th Cir. 1999). However, if an alien believes that even if he went to trial and lost he would still be eligible for a § 212(c) waiver, his "reliance" upon the information that was available to him at the time of his strategic decision-making process constitutes the same "quid pro quo" arrangement this Court found to be sufficient. St. Cyr, 533 U.S. at 322 ("There is a clear difference, for the purposes of retroactivity analysis, between facing possible deportation and facing certain deportation"). See also Magana-Pizano, 200 F.3d at 612 ("That an alien charged with a crime . . . would factor the immigration consequences of their conviction in deciding whether to plead or proceed to trial is well-documented"); see also 3 Bender, Criminal Defense Techniques, §§ 60A.01, 60A.02 (1999) ("Preserving the client's right to remain in the United States may be more important to the client than any potential jail sentence.").

Consequently, in the situation where an alien believed even if he went to trial and lost, he would still remain eligible for § 212(c), and he based his decision to go to trial on that information and the state of the law, then a change in the applicable rules after such a decision has been made constitutes an "obvious and severe retroactive effect." St. Cyr, 533 U.S. at 325. An alien in such a situation, indeed, has nothing to lose and would choose the path which affords him the best outcome both in terms of his criminal and immigration case; for even if he loses a trial, he remains eligible for a § 212(c) waiver. Aliens are acutely aware of their privilege to remain in the United States, especially ones charged with criminal offenses. Thus, the "cost-benefit" analysis undertaken by an alien in deciding whether to accept a plea agreement or to risk going to trial are one and the same; the decision making process consists of "two sides of the same coin." Hence, the risks inherent in going to trial are increased if an alien knows, that if he were to lose, § 440(d) would bar him from discretionary relief and result in his mandatory deportation. The lower court's decision patently failed to recognize the strategic decisions aliens make[2] with respect to their criminal situation. The change in law, under AEDPA § 440(d), certainly has a direct, and predictable, impact on an alien's interest in avoiding deportation. The alien's choice of strategy, therefore, in his criminal proceeding may well be affected by the availability and chances of a § 212(c) waiver.

Additionally, there exists no Landgraf precedent which necessarily requires reliance or an "obvious and severe" effect in order to trigger the presumption against retroactivity. For example, in Hughes Aircraft Co. v. United States ex rel. Schumer, 520 U.S. 939 (1997), a mere change in the law was found to have an impermissible retroactive effect when it resulted in "an increased likelihood of facing a qui tam lawsuit." The Court did not suggest, in that case, that Hughes Aircraft had been prejudiced by a "quid pro quo" arrangement. Lindsey v. Washington, 301 U.S. 397, 401 (1937) ("Removal of the possibility of a sentence of less than fifteen years . . . operates to [defendants'] detriment" (emphasis added)).

[2] For example, in Jideonwo v. INS, 224 F.3d 692, 699 (7th Cir. 2000), the alien specifically "entered into extensive plea negotiations, the sole purpose of which was to ensure that he got less than five years to avoid what would have been a statutory bar to 212(c) relief." St. Cyr, 533 U.S. at 323.

Whether a new statute attaches new legal consequences "demands a commonsense, functional judgment" that "should be informed and guided by familiar considerations of fair notice, reasonable reliance, and settled expectations." Martin v. Hadix, 527 U.S. 343, 357-58 (1998). Prior to AEDPA § 440(d), aliens like Mr. Armendariz had a significant likelihood of receiving § 212(c) relief. Notwithstanding this, because Mr. Armendariz, and other aliens like him who were convicted by jury trial, certainly relied upon the likelihood and availability of § 212(c) relief in deciding whether to risk going to trial – and believing that even had they lost they would still remain eligible for § 212(c) relief (i.e., facing possible deportation) – the elimination of § 212(c) relief (i.e., facing mandatory deportation) by § 440(d) has an "obvious and severe" retroactive effect. St. Cyr, 533 U.S. at 325. The potential for unfairness in the retroactive application of § 440(d) to persons convicted by jury trial is no less significant or manifest than one convicted by plea colloquy.

Specific decisions made by an alien during the course of his criminal proceedings rise to the level of specific reliance upon the then-existing law (e.g., choosing to reject a plea, choosing to risk going to trial, belief in innocence, choosing to preserve his immigration status, choosing not to devote substantial resources to the criminal defense, choosing not to appeal in light of the risks faced on a retrial.) Such decisions have been treated as sufficient to establish a retroactive effect in many cases. Slusser v. Commodity Futures Trading Comm'n, 210 F.3d 783, 786 (7th Cir. 2000) (refusing to allow agency to apply higher civil penalties to a defendant who would not have expected to face such risks at the time that he decided how to finance his defense). Finally, this Court noted that reliance is not required to show a genuine retroactive effect. St. Cyr, 533 U.S. at 321-23. Nevertheless, the decisions of various Circuits have inappropriately limited their retroactivity analysis to "reliance" driven approaches, undermining the Court's retroactivity principles. As this Court noted in St. Cyr, the retroactivity definition "'does not purport to define the outer limit of impermissible retroactivity' "and merely "describes several 'sufficient,' as opposed to 'necessary' conditions for finding retroactivity." St. Cyr, 533 U.S. at 321 n.46. As the lower court's opinion was purportedly premised upon this Court's opinion in St. Cyr, clarification is needed.

Section 440(d) attached new "legal consequences" to events (i.e., decision-making calculus) completed before its enactment. St. Cyr, 533 U.S. at 322. By removing § 212(c) relief, § 440(d) clearly impaired Mr. Armendariz's ability to apply for that relief, and created a new "disability" with respect to his decision-making process.[3] An alien, in deciding whether to risk going to trial or to accept a plea agreement, bases his decision upon the information then-available. An alien in making his decision to risk going to trial with the belief that even if he lost would remain eligible for § 212(c) relief, is clearly prejudiced by AEDPA § 440(d)'s change at a time after he had already acted. By risking going to trial, an alien is implicitly acting in the manner to preserve his immigration status, both by avoiding the conviction which might render him deportable, and by ensuring that § 212(c) relief would remain available even in the event he lost. Section 440(d)'s elimination of any possibility of § 212(c) relief for people who risked going to trial with the expectations of reliance that they would be eligible for such relief clearly, therefore, "attaches a new legal disability, [with] respect to transactions or considerations already past." Landgraf, 511 U.S. at 269. Based upon this Court's Landgraf analysis coupled with the holding in St. Cyr, the court should have found that § 440(d) has an impermissible, retroactive effect for aliens convicted by jury trial. Thus, the court's decision is erroneous in this respect. The outcome, here, is unduly harsh. And, Congress could not have intended such a result.[4]

C. Section 440(d) Of The AEDPA Violates Equal Protection, As Applied.

The guarantee of equal protection under the law has been held applicable to aliens as well as citizens for over a century. Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356, 373-74, 6 S.Ct. 1064, 1072-73 (1886).

Armendariz challenged AEDPA's bar to section 212(c) relief on the constitutional ground that it precluded relief for aliens in deportation proceedings (resident aliens placed in deportation proceedings without having left the country), but not for those in exclusion proceedings (resident aliens stopped at the border on their return from abroad). The court of appeals determined that "Armendariz's equal protection claim is without merit" by indicating that the court had previously "rejected [an] identical challenge in United States v. Estrada-Torres, 179 F.3d 776 (9th Cir. 1999), overruled on other grounds, United States v. Rivera-Sanchez, 247 F.3d 905, 909 (9th Cir. 2001) (en banc)." App. 12a. In the panel's view, in Estrada-Torres, "we disagreed with the BIA's construction of § 440(d). Id. at [4] In fact, the legislative history supports the conclusion that Congress did not intend for § 440(d) to apply retroactively to convictions which pre-dated its enactment. The original Senate bill contained express language making the provision which became AEDPA § 440(d) retroactive. See 141 Cong. Rec. S7553, 7559 (daily ed. May 25, 1995) (containing text of Senate's version of AEDPA, and including in § 303 the provisions which eventually became included in AEDPA § 440). However, this language was eliminated by the conference committee and not included in the final bill. See H.R. Rep. No. 104-518, at 119 (1996), reprinted in 1996 U.S.C.C.A.N. 944, 952 (adopting § 303(e)(4) of Senate bill without adopting the retroactivity provision contained in § 303(f)).

779-80. We held that despite § 440(d)'s plain language, it applies equally to exclusion and deportation proceedings. Id. Because Congress did not draw any distinction between aliens in deportation and those in exclusion proceedings, § 440(d) does not violate equal protection." App. 12a-13a.

The court of appeals misconstrued the holding of Estrada-Torres, and misapplied it to Armendariz's claim. As the Circuit previously noted in Magana-Pizano, "[petitioner] also argues that AEDPA § 440(d) violates the Equal Protection Clause, and that his case is factually and legally distinguishable from [Estrada-Torres]. However, we need not reach this issue because resolution of the question of retroactivity [in favor of petitioner] may make its consideration unnecessary." Magana-Pizano, 200 F.3d at 614, n.15 (emphasis added). Although the court of appeals did not address Armendariz's arguments distinguishing Estrada-Torres as a matter of law and fact, the court nevertheless concluded that it applied. App. 13a.

Resident aliens in deportation proceedings and exclusion proceedings have a constitutional right to due process. See e.g., Landon v. Plasencia, 459 U.S. 21, 103 S. Ct. 321, 329, 74 L. Ed. 2d 21 (1982). Numerous courts have recognized that it would be a violation of equal protection to refuse to hear petitions for discretionary relief from permanent resident aliens in deportation proceedings, but to consider such petitions from immigrants charged with the same offense and with the same ties to this country, merely because the latter had taken a brief trip abroad and been placed in exclusion proceedings upon their return. Tapia-Acuna v. INS, 640 F.2d 223 (9th Cir. 1981); See e.g., Francis v. INS, 532 F.2d 268, 269 (2d Cir. 1976).

The equal protection principle generally does not countenance denying lawful permanent residents in deportation proceedings the same legal protection afforded similarly situated aliens in exclusion proceedings without a rational basis. In Francis, the Second Circuit held that any distinction between deportable and excludable aliens "must be reasonable, not arbitrary, and must rest upon some ground of difference having a fair and substantial relation to the object of the legislation, so that all persons similarly circumstanced shall be treated alike." Francis v. INS, 532 F.2d at 272 (citing Stanton v. Stanton, 421 U.S. 7, 14, 95 S. Ct. 1373, 1377, 43 L. Ed. 2d 688 (1975)).

Although the court of appeals cited to Estrada-Torres, for the proposition that equal protection is not violated, this is patently erroneous. At the time Estrada-Torres, was decided, the Ninth Circuit had ruled in Magana-Pizano v. INS, 152 F.3d 1213 (9th Cir. 1998), amended by 159 F.3d 1217 (9th Cir. 1998) ("Magana I"), that it could not reach the merits of the petition because Congress had repealed the court's jurisdiction. The court also found that § 440(d) of the AEDPA violated the Suspension Clause of the Constitution and was therefore, unconstitutional. Since, this Court's remand of Magana I, and the court of appeals' decision in Estrada-Torres, the Ninth Circuit reissued its decision in Magana-Pizano v. INS, 200 F.3d 603 (9th Cir. 1999) ("Magana II"), and found that § 212(c) relief remains available to certain aliens in deportation proceedings. Nevertheless, the holding in Estrada-Torres was not modified by the Court's decision in Magana II to permit aliens in exclusion proceedings to apply for a § 212(c) waiver. The court of appeals misapprehended Armendariz's arguments, and denied his claim.

Recently, another panel of the court of appeals correctly addressed this precise issue. In Servin-Espinoza v. Ashcroft, 309 F.3d 1193 (9th Cir. 2002), the court of appeals held that the application of AEDPA § 440(d), barring § 212(c) relief, against deportable aliens during the window of time between the BIA's decision and the court's decision in Estrada-Torres, violated equal protection. Because the BIA had an administrative practice of permitting § 212(c) waivers to aliens in exclusion, before Estrada-Torres interpreted the statute to hold otherwise, equal protection was violated. Servin-Espinoza, 309 F.3d at 1197 ("[w]e are thus faced with an equal protection challenge to an administrative policy that violated a statutory command"). Thus, the hybrid scheme of allowing a § 212(c) waiver to certain aliens whilst denying them to other aliens had been resurrected. See Matter of Silva, 16 I&N Dec. 26, 29-30 (BIA 1976) (embracing Second Circuit's decision in Francis). In addition, this Court's decision in St. Cyr, permitting § 212(c) waivers for deportable aliens continues the distinction found to violate equal protection, at least in the Ninth Circuit (i.e., aliens in exclusion proceedings are ineligible for a § 212(c) waiver whilst those in deportation or removal may apply). Tapia-Acuna v. INS, supra.

As in Servin-Espinoza, before the BIA denied Armendariz's claim to § 212(c) relief in October, 1997, the BIA had extended § 212(c) waivers to excludable aliens since its decision in May, 1997 (in Fuentes-Campos) before Estrada-Torres overruled it, a practice which violates equal protection. App. 46a-47a. Allegheny Pittsburgh Coal Co. v. County Commission of Webster County, 488 U.S. 336, 109 S.Ct. 633 (1989).

O'SCANNLAIN, Circuit Judge:

We must decide whether deportation proceedings commence with the service of an order to show cause upon the alien or with the filing of such an order with the Immigration Court.

I

In 1972, Hugo Armendariz-Montoya ("Armendariz") entered the United States without inspection from Mexico when he was three years old. In 1978, he adjusted his status to that of a lawful permanent resident. He has resided in the United States since his entry.

In 1994, the state of Arizona indicted Armendariz for possession of cocaine with the intent to distribute. Armendariz pleaded not guilty, electing a jury trial. In September 1995, he was convicted and sentenced to five years, eight months imprisonment. His subsequent appeals were unsuccessful.

On September 22, 1995, the Immigration and Naturalization Service ("INS") lodged a detainer on Armendariz with the Arizona Department of Corrections. On April 5, 1996, the INS issued an order to show cause ("OSC"), charging Armendariz as deportable for having committed a qualifying controlled substance offense and an aggravated felony. See 8 U.S.C. § 1251(a)(2)(A)(iii), (B)(i) (1994) (current version at 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(2)(A)(iii), (B)(i)). On April 22, 1996, the INS served the OSC upon Armendariz and on December 19, 1996, it filed the order with the Immigration Court.

In April 1997, an Immigration Judge ("IJ") conducted a deportation hearing. Armendariz conceded deportability, but sought a discretionary waiver of inadmissibility under INA § 212(c). Section 440(d) of the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act ("AEDPA"), which was enacted on April 24, 1996, categorically negates § 212(c) relief for those aliens deportable for having committed a qualifying controlled substance offense or an aggravated felony.[1] Pub. L. 104-132, 110 Stat. 1214, 1277. The IJ determined that AEDPA § 440(d) applied to Armendariz who was thus ineligible for a § 212(c) waiver.

[1] The Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act ("IIRIRA") repealed § 212(c) entirely, replacing it with a new form of discretionary relief called "cancellation of removal." See Pub. L. No. 104-208, § 304(b), 100 Stat. 3009, 3009-597 [sic] (1996) (codified at 8 U.S.C. § 1229b). However, IIRIRA's transitional rules maintain the availability of § 212(c) relief, subject to AEDPA § 440(d). See IIRIRA § 309(c)(1), 100 Stat. at 3009 625 (reprinted at 8 U.S.C. § 1101, Historical and Statutory Notes). Armendariz's proceedings fall within IIRIRA's transitional rules. See, e.g., Kalaw v. INS, 133 F.3d 1147, 1150-51 (9th Cir. 1997). Therefore, IIRIRA's repeal of § 212(c) does not affect Armendariz.

Armendariz appealed to the Board of Immigration Appeals ("BIA"), which affirmed. He subsequently filed a petition for review with this court, but we dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. See Armendariz-Montoya v. INS, No. 97-71305 (9th Cir. Feb. 29, 2000); see also IIRIRA § 309(c)(4)(G), 100 Stat. at 3009-626 to 627 (reprinted at 8 U.S.C. § 1101, Historical and Statutory Notes) (stripping jurisdiction over claims on direct review for aliens deportable for certain grounds).

In March 2000, Armendariz filed a habeas petition with the district court. See INS v. St. Cyr, 533 U.S. 289, 314 (2001) (holding that neither AEDPA nor IIRIRA repealed habeas jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 2241). He argued that AEDPA § 440(d) is inapplicable to his deportation proceedings. Alternatively, he claimed that § 440(d) violates the Equal Protection Clause.

The magistrate judge recommended that the court grant the petition based on his conclusion that Armendariz's deportation proceedings commenced with the service, not with the filing, of the OSC. Since the INS served the OSC two days before the enactment of AEDPA, the magistrate concluded that § 440(d) was inapplicable and thus he was eligible to seek a § 212(c) waiver. The magistrate declined to address Armendariz's contention that § 440(d) violates equal protection.

The district court adopted the magistrate's recommendation without comment. The INS noted a timely appeal.

II

Whether AEDPA § 440(d) applies, depends, of course, on the date Armendariz's deportation proceedings commenced. Cortez-Felipe v. INS, 245 F.3d 1054 (9th Cir. 2001) tells us that deportation proceedings commence with the filing of the OSC with the Immigration Court. In Cortez, the alien suspected that the INS would initiate deportation proceedings. IIRIRA was set to take effect on April 1, 1997. However, by late March 1997, the INS had not taken any action. In the hope of avoiding IIRIRA's amendments, the alien contacted the INS to request initiation of deportation proceedings before April 1. On March 27, the INS served the OSC, but did not file it until after IIRIRA became effective.

In holding that proceedings commenced with the filing of the OSC, we relied upon INS regulations to this effect. See 8 C.F.R. § 3.14(a) ("[P]roceedings . . . commence when a charging document is filed with the Immigration Court by the Service."); id. § 239.1(a) ("Every . . . proceeding . . . to determine the deportability . . . of an alien is commenced by the filing of a notice to appear with the Immigration Court . . . . "); id. § 240.55 ("A deportation proceeding is commenced by the filing of [the OSC] with the Immigration Court, and an alien is considered to be in deportation proceedings only upon such filing. . . . "). We also stressed that our previous decisions have uniformly stated that deportation proceedings commence with the filing of the OSC. See El Rescate Legal Servs., Inc. v. Executive Office of Immigration Review, 959 F.2d 742, 749 (9th Cir. 1992) ("A deportation proceeding commences with the filing of an order to show cause."); Orantes-Hernandez v. Thornburgh, 919 F.2d 549, 554 (9th Cir. 1990) ("[A] proceeding to determine the deportability of the alien is commenced by an immigration official who issues and files an order to show cause with the Office of the Immigration Judge."); see also Matter of Sanchez, 20 I. & N. Dec. 223, 225 (BIA Sept. 21, 1990) ("Jurisdiction vests and proceedings commence before an immigration judge when a charging document is filed with the Office of the Immigration Judge. . . .").

Nevertheless, Armendariz argues that Cortez is distinguishable because it arose in the context of IIRIRA, not AEDPA. Armendariz also claims that Cortez is distinguishable because the INS lodged a detainer in this case. We take up his contentions in turn.

A

Armendariz correctly notes that the First Circuit has drawn a distinction between IIRIRA and AEDPA in determining when deportation proceedings commence. Wallace v. Reno, 194 F.3d 279 (1st Cir. 1999), presented materially identical circumstances to this case, i.e., the applicability of AEDPA § 440(d) turned on whether deportation proceedings commenced with the service or with the filing of the OSC. Id. at 287. The court held that deportation proceedings commenced with the service of the OSC. The court refused to accord any deference to the relevant INS regulations. The court stated,

> In this case we are not concerned with the INS's internal time tables, starting points, due dates, and the like but with the judicial question of retroactivity. [The] question turns on . . . the realities of reasonable reliance or settled expectations on the part of litigants. . . . [W]e think that when an order to show cause is served on the alien, the deportation process has effectively begun and expectations properly form, even if there is no actual reliance. Id.

In other words, Wallace held that § 440(d)'s potential retroactive effect militates against holding that proceedings commence with the filing of the OSC.

Wallace was followed by Costa v. INS, 233 F.3d 31(1st Cir. 2000). Costa presented the identical circumstances present in Cortez; the applicability of IIRIRA's permanent amendments turned on whether deportation proceedings commenced with the service or with the filing of the OSC. The court held that deportation proceedings commenced with filing and distinguished Wallace on the ground that the potential retroactive effect of AEDPA § 440(d) is greater than that of IIRIRA's permanent amendments. Id. at 35-36. It also stressed that Wallace arose in the context of habeas, while Costa involved a petition for review. Id. at 36. According to Costa, courts owe greater deference to INS regulations in direct review cases. Id. As such, Costa owed more deference than Wallace to the INS regulations providing that deportation proceedings commence with the filing of the OSC.

We decline to follow the First Circuit's distinction between AEDPA and IIRIRA in determining when deportation proceedings commence. Cortez does not allow it, and states in sweeping terms that deportation proceedings commence with the filing of the OSC. 245 F.3d at 1056-57. Cortez accorded great weight to the relevant INS regulations, which do not allow for a different outcome depending upon whether a particular section of AEDPA or IIRIRA is involved. See 8 C.F.R. § 3.14(a); id. § 239.1(a); id. § 240.55.

In any event, we find the First Circuit's distinction unpersuasive. Wallace inappropriately considered the potential retroactive effect of § 440(d) in determining when deportation proceedings commence. A determination of when deportation proceedings commence stands apart from a consideration of § 440(d)'s potential retroactive effect. As will be discussed shortly, even though deportation proceedings commence with filing, § 440(d) does not apply if its application would result in an a retroactive effect. Finally, we are also unpersuaded by Costa that the time deportation proceedings commence should turn on whether a particular section of AEDPA or IIRIRA is involved.

Armendariz also claims that Cortez is distinguishable because the INS issued a detainer in this case. In particular, he relies upon the Eleventh Circuit's decision in Alanis-Bustamante v. Reno, 201 F.3d 1303 (11th Cir. 2000).

In that case, the INS served an OSC upon the alien while he was imprisoned in June 1995. The INS also contemporaneously lodged a detainer with prison authorities. However, the INS did not file the OSC until June 1997. The court held that the combination of the service of the OSC with the lodging of the detainer "is enough to commence proceedings for purposes of determining the applicable law." Id. at 1310. The court explained that the two actions afforded the INS considerable power over the alien. Id. at 1310. Specifically, the actions gave the INS the power to prevent Bustamante's release from custody at the conclusion of his prison term.

In Cortez, the INS did not lodge a detainer. Armendariz urges us to adopt the logic of the Eleventh Circuit, and hold that deportation proceedings commence with the service of the OSC if a detainer is contemporaneously lodged. Cortez does not allow for such a rule. The relevant INS regulations make the filing of the OSC, not the lodging of a detainer, the critical event.

C

In sum, Cortez dictates that Armendariz's proceedings commenced with the filing of the OSC. Because the INS did not file the OSC until December 1996, his proceedings were not pending at the time of AEDPA's enactment.

III

Armendariz further argues that even if his deportation proceedings commenced after the enactment of AEDPA, § 440(d) is nonetheless inapplicable. Specifically, he contends that application of § 440(d) would result in an impermissible retroactive effect.

When a statutory provision lacks an effective date, we first ask whether Congress has prescribed its temporal reach. Landgraf v. USI Film Prods., 511 U.S. 244, 280 (1994). "If there is no congressional directive on the temporal reach of a statute, we determine whether the application of the statute to the conduct at issue would result in a retroactive effect. If so, then in keeping with our 'traditional presumption' against retroactivity, we presume that the statute does not apply to that conduct." Martin v. Hadix, 527 U.S. 343, 352, (1999).

We previously observed that Congress did not prescribe § 440(d)'s temporal reach. See Magana-Pizano, 200 F.3d 603, 612 (9th Cir.1999). Therefore, § 440(d) applies to Armendariz unless its application would result in a retroactive effect. See, e.g., Martin, 527 U.S. at 352.

In INS v. St. Cyr, 533 U.S. 289, 321-22 (2001), the Supreme Court held that application of § 440(d) to those aliens who pleaded guilty prior to AEDPA's enactment results in a retroactive effect. At the time of plea, those aliens had the possibility of obtaining a § 212(c) waiver of inadmissibility. Section 440(d) eliminated that possibility. If those aliens had been aware of § 440(d) at the time of plea, they might have elected to proceed to trial in lieu of pleading guilty. Id. at 323.

However, as we held in United States v. Herrera-Blanco, 232 F.3d 715, 719 (9th Cir. 2000), application of § 440(d) to those aliens who were convicted after a jury trial does not result in a retroactive effect. Unlike aliens who pleaded guilty, aliens who elected a jury trial cannot plausibly claim that they would have acted any differently if they had known about § 440(d). As the Seventh Circuit explained,

> It would border on the absurd to argue that these aliens might have decided not to commit drug crimes, or might have resisted conviction more vigorously, had they known that if they were not only imprisoned but also, when their prison term ended, ordered deported, they could not ask for a discretionary waiver of deportation. LaGuerre v. Reno, 164 F.3d 1035, 1041 (7th Cir. 1998).

Armendariz pleaded not guilty and elected a jury trial. Therefore, application of § 440(d) does not result in any retroactive effect. Accordingly, § 440(d) is applicable, and Armendariz is barred from seeking § 212(c) relief.

IV

Armendariz lastly claims that if § 440(d) applies, it violates equal protection. While neither the magistrate nor the district court reached this issue, it raises a pure question of law that may be answered by this court in the first instance. See, e.g., Crawford v. C.I.R., 266 F.3d 1120, 1121 (9th Cir. 2001).

Armendariz's argument is rooted in the history of the availability of § 212(c) waivers. Before IIRIRA, the INA distinguished between exclusion proceedings, which were brought against aliens attempting to enter the United States (including those returning to the United States), and deportation proceedings, which were brought against aliens already present in the United States. See, e.g., Requena-Rodriguez v. Pasquarell, 190 F.3d 299, 308 (5th Cir. 1999).

Section 212(c) provides, "Aliens lawfully admitted for permanent residence who temporarily proceeded abroad voluntarily . . . and who are returning to a lawful unrelinquished domicile of seven consecutive years, may be admitted in the discretion of the Attorney General. . . . " 8 U.S.C. § 1182(c) (repealed 1996). By its plain terms, § 212(c) applies only to exclusion proceedings, i.e., aliens seeking to return to the United States. See, e.g., Requena-Rodriguez, 190 F.3d at 308. However, in a series of decisions in the 1950s and 1960s, the BIA interpreted § 212(c) to apply to certain aliens in deportation proceedings. See Arias-Uribe v. INS, 466 F.2d 1198, 1199-1200 (9th Cir. 1972) (collecting cases). Specifically, the BIA held that § 212(c) waivers were available to those aliens in deportation proceedings who had left the United States, but who had successfully returned to the country. See, e.g., Matter of G.A., 7 I & N Dec. 274 (BIA July 19, 1956). Section 212(c) relief was unavailable to those aliens in deportation proceedings who had never left the United States. See, e.g., Arias-Uribe, 466 F.2d at 1199-1200.

In Francis v. INS, 532 F.2d 268 (2d Cir. 1976), the Second Circuit held that the BIA's distinction among deportable aliens was irrational. The BIA later embraced this decision, holding that § 212(c) is available for all aliens in deportation proceedings. See Matter of Silva, 16 I. & N. Dec. 26, 29-30 (BIA Sept. 10, 1976); see also Tapia-Acuna v. INS, 640 F.2d 223, 225 (9th Cir. 1981) (approving of Silva).

Section 440(d) makes § 212(c) relief unavailable to legal permanent residents "who are deportable by reason of having committed" an aggravated felony. 110 Stat. at 1277 (emphasis added). The BIA has held that the term "deportable" means that § 440(d) only applies to aliens in deportation, as opposed to exclusion, proceedings. See In re Fuentes-Campos, 21 I. & N. Dec. 905, 907-10 (BIA May 14, 1997).

Armendariz argues that § 440(d) revives an irrational distinction between aliens in exclusion and deportation proceedings. We rejected the identical challenge in United States v. Estrada-Torres, 179 F.3d 776 (9th Cir. 1999), overruled on other grounds, United States v. Rivera-Sanchez, 247 F.3d 905, 909 (9th Cir. 2001) (en banc). In that case, we disagreed with the BIA's construction of § 440(d). Id. at 779-80. We held that despite § 440(d)'s plain language, it applies equally to exclusion and deportation proceedings. Id. Because Congress did not draw any distinction between aliens in deportation and those in exclusion proceedings, § 440(d) does not violate equal protection. Id.

While our sister circuits have uniformly rejected an identical challenge, they have employed different reasoning from that of Estrada-Torres. See Domond v. INS, 244 F.3d 81, 87 88 (2d Cir. 2001); Jurado-Gutierrez v. Greene, 190 F.3d 1135, 1152-53 (10th Cir.1999); Requena-Rodriguez, 190 F.3d at 309; DeSousa v. Reno, 190 F.3d 175, 185 (3d Cir. 1999); LaGuerre, 164 F.3d at 1041. These circuits have adopted the BIA's interpretation that § 440(d) only applies to deportation, and not to exclusion proceedings. Our sister circuits, however, have concluded that it is rational to apply a harsher standard to deportation proceedings. As the Third Circuit explained,

> In order to aid the United States in expelling criminal aliens from the country, Congress rationally could have decided to encourage such aliens to voluntarily leave the country as a carrot to a potential waiver of removal when they sought reentry. Creating such an incentive may have appeared desirable to Congress for several reasons. First, Congress could have rationally speculated that not all aliens who voluntarily left the country would return. Second, because exclusion proceedings provide fewer procedural protections than deportation proceedings, Congress may have reasoned that encouraging aliens to seek waivers through the exclusion process would decrease the United States' administrative costs in expelling criminal aliens. DeSousa, 190 F.3d at 185.

These decisions have stressed that Congress did not revive an arbitrary distinction in passing § 440(d). The BIA previously had drawn a distinction among aliens in deportation proceedings; § 440(d) draws a distinction between exclusion and deportation proceedings as a whole. In any event, Estrada-Torres dictates that Armendariz's equal protection claim is without merit.

REVERSED.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF ARIZONA

Hugo Armendariz-Montoya, Petitioner, vs. Roseanne C. Sonchik, District Director, U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, Respondent.	No. CIV 00-422 PHX-RGS (LOA) REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION (Filed Oct. 13, 2000)

This matter arises on Petitioner's Petition for Writ of Habeas Corpus pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2441.[1] (document #1) Respondent filed a response to the Petition on March 20, 2000 (document #13) to which Petitioner replied on March 31, 2000 (document #15). Also pending is Respondent's Motion to Dismiss (document #18) filed May 5, 2000 to which Petitioner replied on June 13, 2000 (document #21).[2]

[1] Petitioner also filed a motion for temporary restraining order (document #7) and preliminary injunction (document #11). The District Court granted both motions (document ##10, 22) and ordered that Respondent is enjoined from executing an order of deportation against Petitioner or otherwise placing him beyond the Court's jurisdiction until a final judgment is entered in this matter. (Id.)

[2] In a March 9, 2000 Order (document #2), the Court directed Respondent to answer the Petition. The Court further ordered that "Respondent shall not file a dispositive motion in place of an answer without first showing cause as to why an Answer is inadequate." (Id.) Here, Respondent filed both an Answer and a dispositive motion without establishing the inadequacy of an Answer. Moreover, the Answer and the Motion to Dismiss present the same arguments in response to Petitioner's claims regarding the applicability of § 440(d). The Court, therefore, finds the Motion to Dismiss redundant and in

FACTUAL and STATUTORY BACKGROUND

Petitioner is a native and citizen of Mexico who entered the United States without inspection on June 19, 1972. (document #1 at 4) On May 23, 1978, he adjusted his status to lawful permanent resident. (document #1 at 4) On September 15, 1995, Petitioner was convicted of Unlawful Possession of Cocaine for Sale in the Superior Court of Arizona, Pima County, in violation of Ariz. Rev. Stat. §§ 13-3408(A)(2), (B)(2), (D), and (F). (Respondents' Exh. A)[3]

Under the Immigration and Nationality Act, an alien convicted of any controlled substance violation, such as Petitioner, is deportable. See, INA § 241(a)(2)(B)(I), 8 U.S.C. § 1251(a)(2)(B)(I)(1994), renumbered as INA § 237, 8 U.S.C. § 1277(a)(2)(B)(I). (Supp. 1996) Thus, on April 5, 1996, the Immigration and Naturalization Service ("INS") issued an Order to Show Cause charging Petitioner with deportability under the Immigration and Nationality Act ("INA") § 241(a)(2)(B)(I), 8 U.S.C. § 1251(a)(2)(B)(I) based on his conviction of possession of a controlled substance. (Respondents' Exh. B) The Order to Show Cause was served on Petitioner on April 22, 1996. (Respondents' Exh. C) Prior to the issuance and service of the Order to Show Cause, on September 22, 1995, INS lodged a detainer against Petitioner with the Arizona Department of Corrections. the INS filed the Order to Show Cause with the immigration court. (Respondents' Exh. D)

During the deportation proceedings, Petitioner filed an Application for a Waiver of Inadmissibility and requested relief pursuant to former § 212(c) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(c). Prior to the 1996 amendments to the INA, aliens found deportable could seek a waiver of deportation under INA § 212(c), 8 U.S.C. § 1182(c)(1994).[4] Specifically, prior to 1996, INA § 212(c) authorized the Attorney General to "permit a worthy alien to stay in this country in order to avoid extraordinary hardship to the alien's family in the United States." Cyr v. INS, ___ F.3d ___, No. 99-2614, 2000 WL 1234850 (2d Cir., September 1, 2000).

After Petitioner's deportation proceeding commenced, but before it concluded, Congress enacted two statutes amending the INA: These statutes, the AEDPA and the [4] Former § 212(c) provided:

> Aliens lawfully admitted for permanent residence who temporarily proceeded abroad voluntarily and not under an order of deportation, and who are returning to a lawful unrelinquished domicile of seven consecutive years, may be admitted in the discretion of the Attorney General without regard to [provisions setting forth various ground [sic] for exclusion] . . . The first sentence of this subsection shall not apply to an alien who has been convicted of one or more aggravated felonies and has served for such felony or felonies a term of imprisonment of at least five years.

8 U.S.C. § 1182(c)(1994), repealed by IIRIRA § 304(b), (September 30, 1996).

Courts interpreted section 212(c) to permit the Attorney General to waive deportation under certain conditions. See, Buitrago-Cuesta v. INS, 7 F.3d 291, 292 (2d Cir. 1993).

IIRIRA were enacted April 24, 1996 and September 30, 1996, respectively.[5] Relevant to this matter, these amendments curtailed the Attorney General's authority to waive deportation for certain classes of felonies. Specifically, § 440(d) of the AEDPA expanded the category of convictions which would render an alien ineligible for § 212(c) relief.[6] Under INA § 212(c), as amended by AEDPA § 440(d), waivers could no longer be granted to aliens convicted of certain drug offenses regardless of the length of imprisonment. See, AEDPA § 440(d). The IIRIRA further changed the waiver rules. The IIRIRA contains two sets of provisions, transitional and permanent. The transitional rules, not codified, apply to deportation proceedings commenced before April 1997 in which the deportation order became final after October 30, 1996. Kalaw v. INS, 133 F.3d 1147, 1150 (9th Cir. 1997). Here, the INS issued the Order to Show Cause on April 5, 1996, it was served on April 22, 1996, and filed on December 16, 1996. The deportation order became final after October 30, 1996. Therefore, the transitional rules govern this matter. See, IIRIRA § 309(c).

[6] Section 440(d) provided:

> This section shall not apply to an alien who is deportable by reason of having committed any criminal offense covered in section 241(a)(2)(A)(iii), (B), (C), or (D), or any offense covered by section 241(a)(2)(A)(ii) for which both predicate offenses are covered by section 241(a)(2)(A)(I).

AEDPA § 440(d).

Subsequent to the enactment of the AEDPA, on April 16, 1997, the Immigration Judge found that a § 212(c) waiver was no longer available to Petitioner pursuant to § 440(d) of the AEDPA. (Respondents' Exh. E) On May 9, 1997, Petitioner timely appealed the Immigration Judges decision to the Board of Immigration Appeals ("BIA"). On October 23, 1997, the BIA affirmed the Immigration Judge's denial of Petitioner's request for § 212(c) relief on the ground that the Attorney General's decision in Matter of Sariano, Interim Dec. No. 3289, (A.G. February 21, 1997)[7] interpreting AEDPA § 440(d) made Petitioner ineligible for § 212(c) relief. (Respondents' Exh. F) On November 21, 1997, Petitioner filed a Petition for Review with the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit which was dismissed on February 29, 2000. (Respondents' Exh. G)

On or about September, 1999, Petitioner was released into the custody of the INS, arrested, and transported to Florence SPC for initial processing and execution of the final order of deportation. (document #1) On March 9, 2000, Petitioner filed the pending petition for habeas relief pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2241 (document #1) claiming that: (1) the retroactive application of § 440(d) of the AEDPA to his deportation proceedings pending on the date of the [7] Recently, the Attorney General has proposed regulations that would permit parties adversely affected by erroneous rulings to reopen their cases before the BIA which would effectively reverse the Attorney General's position in Matter of Soriano. See, Ramos-Biruta v. INS, 200 WL 1359593, *1 (9th Cir., August 11, 2000) (unpublished) (citing Section 212(c) Relief for Certain Aliens in Deportation Proceedings Before April 24, 1996, 65 Fed. Reg. 44, 476 (2000) (to be codified at 8 C.F.R. pts. 3 and 212) (proposed July 18, 2000).

AEPDA's enactment violates due process; (2) the application of § 440(d) to aliens in deportation proceedings and not in exclusion proceedings violates the Equal Protection Clause; and (3) Petitioner's mandatory detention pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c) violates due process. (document #1). Although Respondent concedes that this Court has subject matter jurisdiction (document #13), the Court will briefly address this issue.

SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION

The IIRIRA and the Anti-Terrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996, Pub. L. No. 104-132, 110 Stat. 1214 (1996) (codified as amended in sections of 8, 15, 18, 22, 28, 40, 42, 50 U.S.C.) ("AEDPA") amended the INA. "Prior to the passage of AEDPA and IIRIRA, aliens wishing to challenge the constitutionality of a final order of deportation via habeas corpus did so using one of two general methods: (1) proceeding pursuant to INA § 106(a)(10); or (2) proceeding pursuant to the general statutory habeas provision of 28 U.S.C. § 2241." Magana-Pizano v. Immigration and Naturalization Service, 200 F.3d 603, 608 (9th Cir. 1999). The permanent provisions[8] of the IIRIRA repealed INA § 106, the former section

[8] The IIRIRA contained two sets of provisions. The transitional provisions which are not codified in the United States Code and the permanent provisions. The transitional provisions provide that the permanent provisions of IIRIRA do no apply to aliens involved in deportation proceedings commenced prior to April 1, 1997. See, IIRIRA § 309(c)(1). The transitional provisions of IIRIRA apply in this case because Petitioner's deportation proceedings commenced before April 1, 1997.

governing judicial review. 8 U.S.C. § 1252 (West Supp. 1997).

As previously stated, the transitional rules of the IIRIRA govern this case. Section 309(c)(4)(G) of the transitional rules provides, in pertinent part:

> [T]here shall be no appeal permitted in the case of an alien who is inadmissible or deportable by reason of having committed a criminal offense covered in section 212(a)(2) or section 241(a)(2)(A)(iii), (B), (C), or (D) of the immigration and Nationality Act (as in effect as of the date of the enactment of this Act), or by any offense covered by section 241(a)(2)(A)(I) of such Act (as so in effect).

Id. Thus, under the transitional rules, Petitioner's only means of seeking relief is a habeas corpus petition pursuant to § 2241.

With respect to judicial review, § 306(a)(2)(C) of the IIRIRA's permanent provisions provides that:

> [n]otwithstanding any other provision of law, no court shall have jurisdiction to review any final order of removal against an alien who is removable by reason of having committed [certain enumerated offenses including aggravated felonies.]

IIRIRA 306(a)(2)(C), codified as 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(C) (1996) (emphasis added).

The statutory scheme governing judicial review is further complicated by INA § 242(g), codified as 8 U.S.C. § 1252(g), and § 1252(b)(9). Section 1252(g) provides that:

> Except as provided in this section and notwithstanding any other provision of law, no court shall have jurisdiction to hear any cause or claim by or on behalf of any alien arising from the decision or action by the Attorney General to commence proceedings, adjudicate cases, or execute removal orders against any alien under this chapter.

Id. (emphasis added)

Section 1252(b)(9) provides that:

> Judicial review of all questions of law and fact, including interpretation and application of constitutional and statutory provisions, arising from any action taken or proceeding brought to remove an alien from the United States under this subchapter shall be available only in judicial review of a final order under this section.

8 U.S.C. § 1252(b)(9) (emphasis added).

As Respondent concedes, the Ninth Circuit has considered the impact of these provisions on the District Court's jurisdiction over § 2241 petitions and concluded that neither the AEDPA nor the IIRIRA's transitional and permanent rules repeal the statutory habeas remedy available in 28 U.S.C. § 2241. Flores-Miramontes v. INS, 212 F.3d 1133, 1136-38 (9th Cir. 2000); Magana-Pizano, 200 F.3d 603, 609 (9th Cir. 1999). See also, Barapind v. Reno, 2000 WL 1210050, at *8 (9th Cir., August 28, 2000). The Ninth Circuit has further clarified that "[a] direct corollary to our holding that [the amendments to the INA] do[ ] not repeal the availability of habeas relief is that that provision does not 'modify or amend' the scope of our habeas review." Barapind, 2000 WL 1210050, at *8 (quoting Flores-Miramontes, 212 F.3d at 1138, n. 6). Having concluded that this Court has subject matter jurisdiction over Petitioner's § 2241 habeas petition, the Court will consider Petitioner's claims.

I. Whether AEDPA § 440(d) applied to Petitioner

Petitioner claims that the Immigration Judge and the BIA improperly applied AEDPA § 440(d) to deny his motion for an INA § 212(c) waiver of deportation because his removal proceedings commenced upon the service of the Order to Show Cause prior to the enactment of the ADEPA. In response, Respondent asserts that AEDPA § 440(d) applies to Petitioner's deportation proceedings because those proceedings did not commence until after the AEDPA's enactment when the Order to Show Cause was filed with the Immigration Court.

Petitioner and Respondent agree that under Ninth Circuit law, AEDPA § 440(d) does not apply retroactively to deportation proceedings pending at the time of the AEDPA's enactment on April 24, 1996. See, Magana-Pizano v. INS, 200 F.3d 603, 610 (9th Cir. 1999) (holding that AEDPA § 440(d) does not apply to deportation cases pending on the date the AEDPA became law, April 24, 1996.) Thus, the critical inquiry is whether Petitioner's deportation proceedings commenced on the date the INS served the Order to Show Cause or on the date the INS filed that order with the immigration court.

Respondent asserts that deportation proceedings did not commence until December 16, 1996 when the INS filed the charging document[9] with the immigration court pursuant to 8 C.F.R. § 3.14(a) and 8 C.F.R. § 242.1(a).[10] Petitioner, however, maintains that deportation proceedings commenced when the Order to Show Cause was issued and served on Petitioner because at that point, he was subject to the authority of the INS and possible removal. Petitioner notes that the Order to Show Cause advised him of his rights, the nature of the proceedings, the legal authority under which the proceedings were conducted, his right to counsel, the allegations against him and the relevant statutory provisions, and the consequences of his failure to appear at the deportation proceeding. (Petitioner's Exh. A) The Order to Show Cause further advised Petitioner that "the copy of this Order to Show Cause served upon you is evidence of your alien registration while you are under deportation proceedings." (Id)

To date, the Ninth Circuit has not addressed whether, for purposes of applying the 1996 amendments to the INA, deportation proceedings commence on the date on which the charging document is served upon the alien or upon the date the charging document is filed with the [9] The IIRIRA replaced the "order to show cause" with the "notice to appear" as the charging document for removal proceedings. These documents serve the same purpose of notifying an alien of the commencement of removal proceedings and the basis for removal. See, 8 U.S.C. § 1229b; 8 C.F.R. § 3.13 (1999).

immigration court.[11] In fact, the First and Eleventh Circuits[12] are the only two circuit courts which have [11] Respondent contends that the Ninth Circuit has held that deportation proceedings commence on the filing of the Order to Show Cause. In support of that claim, Respondent cites Orantes-Hernandez v. Thornburgh, 919 F.2d 549 (9th Cir. 1990). Orantes, however, was decided before the AEDPA was enacted and did not address the issue before this court. Rather the Orantes court merely stated that "the deportability of an alien is commenced by an immigration official who issues and files an order to show cause with the Office of the Immigration Judge." Id. at 554. The date upon which deportation proceedings commenced was not at issue in Orantes, rather, the Court was merely reciting the relevant INS regulations without analysis. Thus, Orantes is not controlling.

[12] The Seventh Circuit recently addressed a similar issue, the commencement of exclusion proceedings for purposes of determining the application of the IIRIRA. Morales-Ramirez v. Reno, 200 F.3d 977 (7th Cir. 2000). In Morales, the Seventh Circuit held that exclusion proceedings did not commence until the INS filed the charging document with the Immigration Court after the IIRIRA's effective date, therefore petitioner was not eligible for a § 212 waiver. 200 F.3d 977. In so holding, the Seventh Circuit declined to follow the First and Eleventh Circuit's which held, that for purposes of applying the AEDPA, deportation proceedings commence on the service of the Order to Show Cause. Wallace, 194 F.3d at 287; Bustamante, 201 F.3d at 1309. In declining to following [sic] the First and Eleventh Circuits, the Seventh Circuit explained that those circuits decided not to apply § 440(d) retroactively based on the aliens' reasonable reliance and expectations. The Morales court explained that it had reached the opposite conclusion with respect to the retroactivity of § 44-(d) to cases pending when the AEDPA was enacted. 209 F.3d at 982. Contrary to the Seventh Circuit, the Ninth Circuit has held that the AEDPA does not apply retroactively to deportation proceedings pending on the date of the AEDPA's enactment. Magana-Pizano v. INS, 200 F.3d 603 (9th Cir. 1999). Thus, the Court does not find the reasoning of the Morales court persuasive first because that case involved exclusion proceedings and second because it is based on the Seventh Circuit's holding that the AEDPA applies retroactively to cases pending on the date of the AEDPA's enactment.

addressed this precise issue. See, Bustamante v. Reno, 201 F.3d 1303, 1304 (11th Cir. 2000) (holding that removal proceedings commence when the INS serves an order to show cause and has lodged a warrant of detainer against an alien); Wallace v. Reno, 194 F.3d 279, 287 (1st Cir. 1999) (holding that deportation proceedings commence when an order to show cause is served on an alien.)

In Wallace, the First Circuit considered whether § 440(d) precludes § 212(c) relief to an alien served with an Order to Show Cause prior to the AEDPA's enactment. 194 F.3d 279. Similar to respondent in this matter, in Wallace the government argued that based on INS regulations, deportation proceedings do not commence until the filing of the charging document with the immigration court. 194 F.3d at 287. The Wallace court rejected the government's argument reasoning that:

> In this case, we are not concerned with the INS's internal time tables, starting points, due dates, and the like but with the judicial question of retroactivity. This question turns on considerations unrelated to the purpose of the INS regulations – primarily . . . with the evil Congress sought to prevent and the realities of reasonable reliance or settled expectations on the part of litigants. From this standpoint, we think that when an order to show cause is served on the alien, the deportation process has effectively begun and expectations properly form, even if there is no actual reliance.

Wallace, 194 F.3d at 287.

The Eleventh Circuit followed this decision in Bustamante in holding that deportation proceedings commerce when the Order to Show cause has been served and a warrant of detainer lodged. 201 F.3d at 1309-1310. The Bustamante court did not need to decide whether service of the Order to Show Cause was sufficient because, unlike Wallace, a warrant of detainer had been lodged against petitioner at the time the Order to Show Cause was served. Id. at 1309.

Similar to Bustamante, in this case a warrant of detainer had been lodged against Petitioner at the time the Order to Show Cause was served. Thus, this Court need not decide whether service of the Order to Show Cause alone was sufficient to commence deportation proceedings. Finding the reasoning of the Eleventh and First Circuits persuasive, this court will join these circuits in holding that for purposes of applying the 1996 amendments to the INA, deportation proceedings commence when and [sic] Order to Show Cause has been served and a warrant of detainer lodged. See, Attwood v. Reno, 2000 WL 900499 (D.Mass. June 16, 2000) (holding that petitioner's deportation proceedings commenced on April 18, 1996 when the INS issued the Order to Show Cause even though that order was not served on petitioner until June 6, 1996); Sciglitano v. Holmes, 2000 WL 675696 (E.D.Pa. May 23, 2000) (holding that service of Order to Show Cause commenced deportation proceedings.); Mercado-Amador v. Reno, 47 F.Supp.2d 1219, 1224 (holding that deportation proceedings commenced upon issuance of Order to Show Cause). See also, Ramos-Birueta v. INS, 2000 WL 1359593 (9th Cir., August 11, 2000) (unpublished) (noting, without analysis, that petitioner "was placed in deportation proceedings by issuance of an Order to Show Cause on January 20, 1994" and holding that because this pre-dated the AEDPA, § 440 did not apply.) "To conclude otherwise risks undermining the reasonable expectations of an alien, it also ignores the INS' power over an alien once it issues the order to show cause. As soon as the INS issued the order to show cause, it has the authority to arrest [Petitioner] . . . As soon as the warrant of detainer was lodged against [Petitioner], his release from custody was problematic absent further proceedings." Bustamante, 201 F.3d at 1309-10.

As on April 22, 1996, Petitioner was subject to the INS' authority and faced deportation proceedings. Significantly, at the time the warrant of detainer was lodged and the Order to Show Cause served, Petitioner was eligible for consideration of an INA § 212(c) discretionary waiver from deportation. See, 201 F.3d at 1310.

In conclusion, Petitioner's deportation proceedings commenced on April 22, 1996 when a warrant of detainer had been lodged and an Order to Show Cause served. As such, Petitioner's case was pending as on April 22, 1996, prior to the enactment of the AEDPA. Because the 1996 amendments to the INA do no [sic] apply retroactively, the INS must consider the merits of Petitioner's application for § 212(c) relief. Therefore, the undersigned recommends that: (1) Petitioner's petition for writ of habeas corpus be granted; (2) Respondent reopen Petitioner's case and consider his claim for § 212(c) relief on the merits; and (3) Respondent continue to be enjoined from deporting Petitioner until after Petitioner is provided the opportunity to exhaust his claim for § 212(c) relief.

II. Equal Protection Claim

In his second claim for relief, Petitioner contends that the application of AEDPA § 440(d) to him violates equal protection because it discriminates between aliens in deportation proceedings and those in exclusion proceedings.

Prior to the passage of the AEDPA and the IIRIRA, § 212(c) relief was available to aliens whether in deportation or exclusion proceedings. See, Tapia-Acuna v. INS, 640 F.2d 223, 225 (9th Cir. 1981) (holding that an application of § 212(c) which granted relief to aliens in exclusion but not deportation proceedings violated equal protection). On April 24, 1996, Congress amended 8 U.S.C. § 1182(c), INA § 212(c),to make discretionary relief from deportation unavailable to deportable aliens convicted of offenses covered by 8 U.S.C. § 1251(a)(2). On its face, this amendment denied § 212(c) relief to deportable aliens.

Thereafter, in September 1996, Congress enacted the IIRIRA repealing § 212(c) as amended by AEDPA § 440(d). Section 304(a)(7) of the IIRIRA consolidated deportation and exclusion proceedings into "removal" proceedings. Thus, the IIRIRA eliminated the equal protection issue by making § 212(c) relief unavailable to aliens in either deportation or exclusion proceedings. The IIRIRA amendments, however, did not take effect until April 1, 1997 and do not apply to deportation proceedings pending prior to that date. Because Petitioner's deportation proceedings were pending before April 1, 1997, the IIRIRA does not apply to him.

The Court, however, need not reach the equal protection issue because the undersigned has found that § 440(d) does not apply to Petitioner whose deportation proceedings commenced before the April 24, 1996 enactment of the AEDPA. See, Section I, supra.

III. Mandatory Detention

Finally, Petitioner claims that his continued detention under INA section 236(c), 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c) violates due process. Respondents assert that Petitioner is not detained under § 236(c), but rather pursuant to INA § 241, 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a) on the ground that his order of deportation is administratively final.

A. Whether Petitioner is Detained Pursuant to INA § 241 or INA § 236

As set forth above, the parties disagree as to whether Petitioner is detained pursuant to INA § 241 or § 236. The court must address this issue as a threshold matter before addressing whether detention Petitioner's under § 236 violates the Due Process Clause.

Section 241 of the INA requires detention of an alien during a 90-day period in which to effect the alien's removal.[13] 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)(A). The 90 days commences on the latest of the following: the "date the order of removal becomes administratively final" or "[i]f the removal order is judicially reviewed and if a court orders a stay of removal of the alien, the date of the court's final order." 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)(B)(I) and (ii). If not removed within 90 days, the alien becomes subject to supervision. 8 U.S.C. § 12319(a)(1)(A) and (3).

[13] The amendments to the INA consolidated exclusion and deportation proceedings into one procedure for "removal." 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(a)(1).

Section 236 of the INA provides that the "Attorney General shall take into custody any alien who is deportable by reason of having committed any offense covered in section . . . 1227(a)(2)(A)(iii)," pending a decision whether he is to be removed. 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c).

Respondent maintains that § 236 applies prior to the issuance of a deportation order and that § 241 applies post issuance. Thus, Respondent asserts that because an order of deportation has been issued, Petitioner is detained pursuant to § 241.

"A § 212(c) hearing to which [the undersigned has determined] Petitioner is entitled, is successful, would void the order [of deportation]." Rogowski v. Reno, 94 F.Supp.2d 177, 182 (D.Conn. 1999). Additionally, on June 14, 2000, the District Court granted Petitioner's motion for preliminary injunction enjoining Respondent from executing an order of deportation against Petitioner or otherwise placing him beyond the Court's jurisdiction until a final judgment is entered in this matter. (document #22) Thus, the order of deportation is currently stayed. Thus, reading § 241 and § 236 together, § 241 does not apply to Petitioner's current detention.

As long as Petitioner can seek judicial review of the BIA's decision, the BIA order is not final. Thus, in view of the current posture of this case, Petitioner is detained pursuant to § 236. The Court, therefore, will address the propriety of his detention under that section.

B. Constitutionality of Mandatory Detention Pursuant to INA § 236

In addressing Petitioner's claim that his mandatory detention under § 236 violates due process, the court will first address the background of detention of aliens.

1. Detention of Aliens

The Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952 (the "Act" or "INA"), revised previous immigration laws. The Act contained provisions regulating criminal aliens. An alien was subject to deportation if convicted of a "crime involving moral turpitude" and if the crime was committed within five years after entry into the Unites States. 8 U.S.C. § 1251(a)(4)(A); Martinez v. Greene, 28 F.Supp.2d at 1279. An alien convicted of violating drug or firearm laws was also deportable. 8 U.S.C. § 156; Martinez v. Greene, 28 F.Supp.2d at 1279.

In 1988, Congress passed an omnibus drug enforcement bill, the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 ("ADAA"), which included provisions, deemed amendments to the Act, relating to criminal aliens. These provisions established a new category of deportable alien, the "aggravated felon." The ADAA defined aggravated felonies as murder, drug trafficking crimes, or illicit trafficking in firearms or destructive devices, including any attempt or conspiracy to commit such acts in the United States. ADAA § 7342, amending the Act § 101(a), 8 U.S.C. § 1251(a) (1982); Martinez v. Greene, 28 F.Supp.2d at 1279. Furthermore, the ADAA § 7343(a), the Act § 242(a)(2) required the Attorney General to take into custody any alien convicted of an aggravated felony upon completion of the alien's sentence and barred the Attorney General from releasing the alien. Id.; Martinez v. Greene, 28 F.Supp.2d at 1279.

The majority of courts which have considered this mandatory detention provision declared it unconstitutional in violation of Due Process. Id. Thus, Congress subsequently amended the statute in 1990 and 1991 to permit release of those aggravated felons who were lawfully admitted to the United States and who could demonstrate that they were not a threat to the community and were likely to appear for their hearings. Id. at 1279-80.

Thereafter, in 1996, Congress enacted the AEDPA, which established, for aggravated felons and other noncitizens with criminal convictions, automatic mandatory detention without eligibility to apply for bond. INA § 242(a)(2), 8 U.S.C. § 1252. The AEDPA was replaced with the IIRIRA, which included "Transition Period Custody Rules." These rules provided bond hearings to aliens with criminal convictions at which they could seek to demonstrate legal entry into the United States and to establish that the alien did not present a substantial risk of flight or threat to persons or property. If the alien met these criteria, the Immigration Court could, as a matter of discretion, set bond pending the final administrative action in the case. Martinez, 28 F.Supp.2d at 1280.

The IIRIRA's Transition Period custody Rules expired on October 9, 1998 and INA § 236(c), 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c) became effective. Martinez, 28 F.Supp.2d at 1280. Section 236(c) provides:

Detention of criminal aliens

(1) Custody

The Attorney General shall take into custody any alien who –

(A) is inadmissible by reason of having committed any offense covered in section 1182(a)(2) of this title,

(B) is deportable by reason of having committed any offense covered in section 1227(a)(2)(A)(ii), (A)(iii), (B), (C), or (D) of this title,

(C) is deportable under section 1227(a)(2)(A)(I) of this title on the basis of an offense for which the alien has been sentence (sic) to a term of imprisonment of at least 1 year, or

(D) is inadmissible under section 1182(a)(3)(B) of this title or deportable under section 1227(A)(4)(B) of this title, when the alien is released, without regard to whether the alien is released on parole, supervised release, or probation, and without regard to whether the alien may be arrested or imprisoned again for the same offense.

(2) Release

The Attorney General may release an alien described in paragraph (1) only if the Attorney General decides pursuant to section 3521 of Title 18, that release of the alien from custody is necessary to provide protection to a witness, a potential witness, a person cooperating with an investigation into major criminal activity, or an immediate family member or close associate of a > witness, potential witness, or person cooperating with such an investigation, and the alien satisfies the Attorney General that the alien will not pose a danger to the safety of other persons or of property and is likely to appear for any scheduled proceeding. A decision relating to such release shall take place in accordance with a procedure that considers the severity of the offense committed by the alien.

INA § 236(c), 8 U.S.C. § 1226(c). Petitioner challenges the constitutionality of this provision.

2. Analysis

Petitioner claims that by denying him an individualized bond hearing, § 236(c) deprives him of his right to due process of law guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment of the United States Constitution. The issue before this Court is whether the mandatory detention provision contained in § 236(c) is unconstitutional, at least as applied to Petitioner.

a. Scope of judicial review

This court has only limited authority to review immigration legislation. The Supreme Court has emphasized that "over no conceivable subject is the legislative power of Congress more complete than it is over" the admission and expulsion of aliens. Fiallo v. Bell, 430 U.S. 787, 792, 97 S.Ct. 1473 (1977). The Court has long recognized "the power to expel or exclude aliens as a fundamental sovereign attribute exercised by the Government's political departments largely immune from judicial control" Shaughnessy v. Mezei, 345 U.S. 206, 210, 73 S.Ct. 625

(1953). "[T]he power over aliens is of a political character and therefore subject only to narrow judicial review." Hampton v. Mow Sun Wong, 426 U.S. 88, 101 n.21, 96 S.Ct. 1895 (1976).

b. Standard of review

"It is well-established that the Fifth Amendment entitles aliens to due process of law in deportation proceedings." Reno v. Flores, 507 U.S. 292, 306, 113 S.Ct. 1439, 1449 (1993). Congress has broad powers over immigration and may make rules "that would be unacceptable if applied to citizens." Mathews v. Diaz, 426 U.S. 67, 79-80, 96 S.Ct. 1883 (1976).

There is, however, a distinction between Congress' power over substantive immigration laws and its power to enact rules implementing or enforcing those laws:

> Congress' broad authority over immigration has traditionally extended to decisions about what classes of aliens are admissible and deportable and under what circumstances. See, e.g., Fiallo, 430 U.S. at 792, 97 S.Ct. at 473 (Congress has plenary power over admission of aliens). Thus, it has been said that "the power to expel or exclude aliens . . . [is] largely immune from judicial control," Shaughnessy v. U.S. ex rel. Mezei, 345 U.S. 206, 210, 73 S.Ct. 625, 97 L.Ed. 956 (1953) (emphasis added); that Congress has "exceptionally broad power to determine which classes of aliens may lawfully enter the country," Fiallo, 430 U.S. at 794, 97 S.Ct. 1473 (emphasis added); and that Congress has "a sovereign right to determine what noncitizens shall be permitted to remain within our borders." Carlson v. Landon, 342 U.S.

> 524, 534, 72 S.Ct. 525, 96 L.Ed. 547 (1952) (emphasis added).

Danh v. Demore, 59 F.Supp.2d at 999.

This case presents a different issue: whether Congress' power to detain aliens pending deportation proceedings without any possibility of release on bond is insulated from meaningful judicial review. Id.

A federal statute is presumed constitutional unless shown otherwise. Szeto v. Reno, 2000 WL 630869, *2 (N.D. Cal. May 5, 2000); Danh v. Demore, 59 F.Supp.2d 994, 997 (N.D. Cal. 1999). To prevail on a facial challenge to the constitutionality of a statute, the petitioner "must establish that no set of circumstances exists under which the [statute] would be valid." United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739, 745, 107 S.Ct. 2095 (1987); Danh v. Demore, 59 F.Supp.2d at 997-98. To prevail on an "as applied" challenge, the petitioner must only show that the statute, as applied to him, is invalid. Danh, 59 F.Supp. at 998.

The substantive component of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments' guarantee of due process of law "forbids the government to infringe certain 'fundamental' liberty interests at all, no matter what process is provided, unless the infringement is narrowly tailored to serve a compelling state interest." Reno v. Flores, 507 U.S. 292, 302-03, 113 S.Ct. 1439, 1447 (1993) (emphasis in original); see, United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 1301, 746, 107 S.Ct. 2095, 2101 (1987).

Reno v. Flores involved the constitutionality of the release procedures accorded juvenile aliens. The Court determined that the "freedom from physical restraint . . . in the sense of shackles, chains, or barred cells", was not at issue, id. at 302, 113 S.Ct. at 1447, and that because "juveniles, unlike adults, are always in some form of custody", the "right" asserted by Flores could not be considered "fundamental." Id. at 302-03, 113 S.Ct. at 1447.

Unlike the issue in Flores, freedom from physical restraint is precisely the issue in this case. Freedom from bodily restraint is at the core of the liberty which the Due Process Clause protects. Foucha v. Louisiana, 504 U.S. 71, 80, 12 S.Ct. 1780, 1785 (1992). "The institutionalization of an adult by the government triggers heightened, substantive due process scrutiny." Reno v. Flores, 507 U.S. at 316, 113 S.Ct. at 1454 (O'Connor, J., concurring). The Salerno standard applies here. Many, if not most, of the courts that have addressed this issue, agree. See, e.g., Szeto v. Reno, 2000 WL 630869 at *6; Bouayad v. Holmes, 74 F.Supp.2d 471, 474 (E.D.Pa. 1999); Danh v. Demore, 59 F.Sup.2d at 1000; Van Eeton v. Beebe, 49 F.Supp.2d 1186, 1189 (D. Or. 1999); Diaz-Zaldierna v. Fasano, 43 F.Supp.2d 1114, 1119 (S.D. Cal. 1999); Martinez v. Greene, 28 F.Supp. at 1281; but see, Alikhani v. Fasano, 70 F.Supp.2d 1124, 1134 (S.D. Cal. 1999).

c. Substantive due process

District courts are split over whether the mandatory detention provision of § 236(c) violates an alien's due process rights. See, e.g., Greene v. Vo, 2000 WL 1175095 (D. Co. Aug. 18, 2000 (section 236(c) facially violates substantive due process); Szeto v. Reno, 2000 WL 630869 (section 236(c) violates substantive due process as applied to petitioner); Bouayad v. Holmes, 74 F.Supp.2d at 476 (same); Danh v. Demore, 59 F.Supp.2d at 1001 (same); Van Eeton v. Beebe, 49 F.Supp.2d at 1189-90 (same); Martinez

v. Greene, 28 F.Supp.2d at 1282 (section 236(c) facially violates substantive due process); but see, Lezcano v. Reno, 2000 WL 1175564 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 4, 2000) (petitioner failed to show that § 236(c) is unconstitutional on its face or as applied); Alikhani v. Fasano, 70 F.Supp. at 1134 (same); Diaz-Zaldierna v. Fasano, 43 F.Supp.2d at 1120 (same).

The only circuit court that has addressed the constitutionality of § 236(c) is the Seventh, which in Parra v. Perryman, 172 F.3d 954, 958 (1999), upheld the statute on the grounds that a fundamental liberty interest was not implicated. But Parra is distinguishable. In Parra, the petitioner conceded deportability, so his "legal right to remain in the United States [had] come to an end." Id. at 958. The court opined that "[a]n alien in Parra's position can withdraw his defense of the removal proceeding and return to his native land, thus ending his detention immediately. He has the keys in his pocket." Id.

By contrast, Petitioner contests his deportability and does not assert an absolute right to be released pending deportation proceedings. Parra sought release so that he could spend his remaining time in the Untied States at home with his family. Parra v. Perryman, 172 F.3d at 956. Petitioner, however, seeks "only the modest right to an individualized bond determination regarding whether release pending deportation is appropriate." Danh v. Demore, 59 F.Supp.2d at 1003.

Even if mandatory detention can be shown to protect the public from criminal aliens and to ensure that the aliens are readily available for removal, these objectives can be satisfied by conducting individual hearings:

> While the risk of flight by aliens may be significant, the public can still be protected by a careful evaluation of an individual alien's case which should result in the detention of those who are likely to flee. The need for a blanket rule of detention of certain aliens rather an (sic) individual evaluation is undermined by 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(3), (60, which provide that ninety days after an order of removal becomes final, an alien who has not yet been removed from the country may be released from detention in the discretion of the Attorney General. See Martinez, 28 F.Supp.2d at 1283-84. Aliens who are under a final order of removal surely present a greater risk of flight or danger to the community, yet their continued detention is not mandated. Given that a hearing within a reasonable time period after removal proceedings are commenced will meet the government's concerns regarding protection of the community and lessening the risk of flight, delaying a hearing until after the alien has been ordered removed is excessive.

Bouayad v. Holmes, 74 F.Supp.2d at 475.

The undersigned, like the court in Danh, declines to follow Parra, and recommends that this court join those courts finding that the mandatory detention provisions are unconstitutional in violation of the Due Process Clause.

d. Procedural due process

Having concluded that Petitioner's substantive due process rights have been violated, it is unnecessary to determine whether his procedural due process rights have also been violated. Only when a restriction on liberty survives substantive due process scrutiny does the further question of whether the restriction is implemented in a procedurally fair manner become ripe for consideration. Danh v. Demore, 59 F.Supp.2d at 1004. The court, however, will address the issue briefly.

To determine whether a statute or governmental conduct satisfies procedural due process, courts must generally consider the following factors: (1) the private interest affected by the official action; (2) the risk that current procedures will cause an erroneous deprivation of the private interest, and the probable value, if any, of additional or substitute procedural safeguards; and (3) the government's interest, including the fiscal and administrative burdens that additional or substitute procedures would entrail. Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319, 335, 96 S.Ct. 893 (1976); Danh v. Demore, 59 F.Supp.2d at 1004; Van Eeton v. Beebe, 49 F.Supp.2d at 1190; Martinez v. Greene, 28 F.Supp.2d at 1282-83.

Here, the private interest affected is great – the right to be free of indefinite and possible long-term detention pending a deportability determination. Van Eeton v. Beebe, 49 F.Supp.2d at 1190; Martinez v. Greene, 28 F.Supp.2d at 1283. The risk of erroneous deprivation of liberty is substantial because § 236(c) provides no procedure at all for determining if an individual warrants release on bond. Id. Finally, the burden on the government of holding individual bond hearings is minimal because the alien is already entitled to a hearing to determine if he is an "aggravated felon" under the IIRIRA. "If familiar traditional bail procedural requirements are imposed, the attendant fiscal and administrative burdens would be minimal." Martinez v. Greene, 28 F.Supp.2d at 1283.

"A fundamental requirement of due process is 'the opportunity to be heard' . . . at a meaningful time and in a meaningful manner." Armstrong v. Manzo, 380 U.S. 545, 552, 85 S.Ct. 1187 (1965); Danh v. Demore, 59 F.Supp.2d at 1004. The undersigned concludes that "due process requires an individualized consideration of whether each alien detained pursuant to § 1226(c)(1) represents a flight risk and a threat to the community's safety." Van Eeton v. Beebe, 49 F.Supp.2d at 1190; Martinez v. Greene, 28 F.Supp.2d at 1283.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, the Court finds that AEDPA § 440(d) does not apply to Petitioner's case where his deportation proceedings commenced prior to the AEDPA's enactment. In view of that holding, the Court declines to address Petition's Equal Protection claim. Finally, the Court finds that Petitioner's detention pursuant to § 236 violates due process

In accordance wit the foregoing,

IT IS HEREBY RECOMMENDED that: (1) Petitioner's petition for writ of habeas corpus (document #1) be GRANTED; (2) Respondent reopen Petitioner's case and consider his claim for § 212(c) relief on the merits; and (3) Respondent continue to be enjoined from deporting Petitioner, if at all, until after Petitioner is provided the opportunity to exhaust his claim for § 212(c) relief.

IT IS FURTHER RECOMMENDED the Respondent's Motion to Dismiss (document #18) be STRICKEN.

IT IS FURTHER RECOMMENDED that Respondent be ordered to release Petitioner unless within twenty days of the date on which the District Court enters a judgment in this matter he is afforded an individualized bond hearing before an Immigration Judge.

This recommendation is not an order that is immediately appealable to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. Any notice of appeal pursuant to Rule 4(a)(1), Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure should not be filed until entry of the district court's judgment. The parties shall have ten (10) days from the date of service of a copy of this recommendation within which to file specific written objections with the Court. See, 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1) and Rules 72, 6(a) and 6(e), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Thereafter, the parties have ten (10) days within which to file a response to the objections. Failure to timely file objections to any factual determinations of the Magistrate Judge will be considered a waiver of a party's right to de novo consideration of the factual issues and will constitute a waiver of a party's right to appellate review of the findings of fact in an order or judgment entered pursuant to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation.

IN DEPORTATION PROCEEDINGS

ON BEHALF OF
RESPONDENT: Vikram K. Badrinath, Esquire
Stender & Larkin
630 South Main Avenue
Tucson, Arizona 85701

ORDER:

PER CURIAM. You are seeking relief from deportation under section 212(c) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(c). However, you are statutorily ineligible for such relief as an "alien who is deportable by reason of having committed any criminal offense covered in section 241(a)(2)(A)(iii), (B), (C), or (D), or any offense covered by section 241(a)(2)(A)(ii) for which both predicate offenses are, without regard to the date of their commission, otherwise covered by section 241(a)(2)(A)(i)." See Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996, Pub. L. No. 104-132, 110 Stat. 1214 ("AEDPA") § 440(d); Matter of Soriano, Interim Decision 3289 (A.G., Feb. 21, 1997).

You have argued on appeal that AEDPA violates the equal protection clause of the Constitution because the new 212(c) provisions apply only in deportation proceedings and not in exclusion proceedings. We cannot rule on the constitutionality of laws enacted by Congress. See, e.g.,

Matter of Fuentes-Campos, Interim Decision 3318 (BIA 1997); Matter of C., 20 I&N Dec. 529 (BIA 1992).

You have also filed a motion to admit new evidence on appeal. The evidence you seek to have admitted goes to the discretionary factors pertinent to section 212(c) relief. However, as you are statutorily ineligible for section 212(c) relief, it would serve no purpose to admit evidence concerning your equities. Thus, the motion is denied.

Accordingly, the appeal is dismissed.

BEFORE: O'SCANNLAIN and TALLMAN, Circuit Judges, and KING*,
